

SAMUEL JOHNSON A Dictionary of the English Language LONDON, 1755 THE WARNOCK LIBRARY Octavo

F A B

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABA'CEOUS. adj. [fabaceus, Latin.] Having the nature of a bean. Dist.

FA'BLE. n. f. [fable, French; fabula, Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the bees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison's Spectator.

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all those fable makers,
He never sow'd on Almain acres. Dryden.

3. A vicious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives fables. 1 Tim. iv. 7.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lye. This sense is merely familiar.

To FA'BLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That warring conquest still desires to rove!
In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lye.

He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shakefp. Henry VI.

To FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell of falsity.

We mean to win,

Or turn this heav'n itself into the hell
Thou fablest. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 292.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, that seem'd
Fairer than feign'd of old, or fah'd since
Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,
By knights. Milton's Parad. Lost.

FA'BLE. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickell.

FA'BLER. n. f. [from fable.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories.

To FABRICATE. v. a. [fabricar, Latin.]

1. To build; to construct.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricate.

FABRIC'ATION. n. f. [from fabricate.] The act of building; construction.

This fabricat'on of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FA'BRICK. n. f. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacancies to the vacancies, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Watson.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

Still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

F.

F A C

To FA'BRICK. v. a. [from the noun.] To build; to form; to construct.

Shew what laws of life
The cheese inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their manfions. Phillips.

FA'BULIST. n. f. [fabuliste, French.] A writer of fables.

Quitting Elo and the fabulists, he copies from Boccace. Coxal.

Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction. Garriek.

FABULOSITY. n. f. [fabulositas, Latin.] Lyingness; fulness of stories; fabulous invention.

In their fabulosity they would report, that they had observations for twenty thousand years. Abbot's Description of the World.

FA'BULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Latin.] Feigned; full of fables; or invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 110.

FA'BULOUSLY. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 8.

FACE. n. f. [face, French, from facies, Latin.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod. xxxiv. 35.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon, Essay 44.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In ev'ry face I found a dart. Addison's Spectator.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all pow'r of face. Pope's Epistles.

3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Gen. ii. 6.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.

The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Exek. xli. 44.

4. State of affairs.

He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd,
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton's Par. Lost.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison's Spectator.

5. Appearance; resemblance.

Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;
For such are treasons. Ben. Johnson.

At the first thock, with blood and powder stain'd,
Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

6. Preference; fight.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall lay her before his face. Numb. xix. 3.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden's Iliad.

7. Confidence; boldness.

Thinking, by this face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon, Essay 28.

You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras, p. ii.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have certainly stolen.

8 R

F A C

L'Estrange, Fable 415.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations.
Tillotson, Preface.

8. Distortion of the face.
Shame itself!
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FACE to FACE. [An adverbial expression.]
1. When both parties are present.
It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face.
Acts xxv. 16.

2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies.
Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face.
1 Cor. xiii. 12.

TO FACE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To carry a false appearance; to play the hypocrite.
Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lye,
To face, to forge, to scoff, to company.
Hubbard's Tale.

2. To turn the face; to come in front.
Face about, man; you a soldier, and afraid of the enemy!
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice recount;
Hail and farewell they shouted thrice again,
Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again.
Dry.

TO FACE. v. a.
1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.
I'll face
This tempest, and deserve the name of king.
Dryden.
We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle.
Addison on the War.
They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution.
Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence.
We trapp'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own.
Hudibras, p. iii. c. 2.
Because he walk'd against his will,
He fac'd men down that he stood still.
Prior.

3. To stand opposite to.
On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan; the reverse has on it the circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it.
Addison on Italy.
The temple is described to be square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world.
Pope's Temple of Fame.

4. To cover with an additional superfluity; to invest with a covering.
The whole fortification of Soleure is faced with marble.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Where your old bank is hollow, face it with the first spit of earth that you dig out of the ditch.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

FACELESS. adj. [from face.] Without a face.
Baile.

FACEPAINTER. n. f. [face and painter.] A drawer of portraits; a painter who draws from the life.

FACEPAINTING. n. f. [face and painting.] The art of drawing portraits.
Georgione, the cotemporary of Titian, excelled in portraits or facepainting.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FACEY. n. f. [facette, French.] A small surface; a superficies cut into several angles.
Honour that is gained and broken upon another, hath the quickest reflection, like diamonds cut with facets.
Bacon.

FACEYIOUS. adj. [facetieux, French; facetiae, Lat.] Gay; cheerful; lively; merry; witty. It is used both of persons and sentiments.
Socrates, informed of some derogating speeches used of him behind his back, made this facetious reply, Let him beat me too when I am absent.
Government of the Tongue, f. 6.

FACEYIOUSLY. adv. [from facetious.] Gayly; cheerfully; wittily; merrily.

FACEYIOUSNESS. n. f. [from facetious.] Cheerful wit; mirth; gaiety.

FACEY. adj. [facile, French; facilis, Latin.]
1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.
Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant.
Milton on Education.
To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo.
Glanv. Sapf.
By dividing it into parts to distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful.
Evelyn's Kalendar.
This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious.
Wilkins's Math. Magic.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.
The facile gates of hell too lightly barr'd.
Milt. P. Lost.

F A C

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.
I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,
Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;
I meant each softest virtue there should meet,
Fit in that softer bosom to reside.
Ben. Johnson's Epigrams.
Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,
Benevolent and facile, thus reply'd.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.
Too facile then, thou didst not much gain say;
Nay didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss.
Milt. P. Lost.
Since Adam and his facile confort Eve
Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me.
Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way.
Calamy.

TO FACILITATE. v. a. [facilitate, French.] To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.
Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work.
Bacon's Natural History.
They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt.
Clarendon, b. viii.
Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule, or a finishing of the picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.
What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions.
Arbutnot on Diet.
A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain.
Swift.

FACILITY. n. f. [facilitas, French; facilitas, Latin.]
1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.
Yet reason faith, reason should have ability
To hold these worldly things in such proportion,
As let them come or go with even facility.
Sidney, b. ii.
Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility.
Raleigh.
A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice.
Bacon's holy War.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.
They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.
The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice.
Locke.

3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; to ready compliance.
Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without.
Bacon, Essay 11.
'Tis a great error to take facility for good-nature; tenderness, without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly.
L'Estrange, Fable 30.

4. Easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.
He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire.
South's Sermons.

FACINEROUS. adj. [corrupted by Shakespeare from facinorous; facinus, facinoris, Latin.] Wicked; facinorous.
'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he's of a most facinorous spirit that will not acknowledge it.
Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.

FACING. n. f. [from To face.] An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.
These offices and dignities were but the facings and fringes of his greatness.
Watson.

FACINOROUS. adj. [facinora, Latin.] Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. f. [from facinorous.] Wickedness in a high degree.

FACT. n. f. [factum, Latin.]
1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.
In matter of fact there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgment: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world.
Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done.
Bacon's Nat. History.
Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied.
South's Sermons.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

Those

F A C

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat four or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination.
Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 795.
If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion.
Manifold fins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it.
Smalbridge.

3. Action; deed.
Unhappy man! to break the pious laws.
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood,
'Tis love of honour and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood.
Dryden.

FACTORY. n. f. [factio, French; factio, Latin.]
1. A party in a state.
The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.
Shakespeare, Henry VI.
He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factions.
Shakespeare's Timon.
Their hatred went so far, that by one of Simon's faction murders were committed.
2 Mac. iv. 9.
By the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancings of any factions.
King Charles.

2. Tumult; discord; dissension.
They remained at Newbery in great faction among themselves.
Clarendon.

FACTIONARY. n. f. [factionnaire, French.] One of a faction; a party man. A word not in use.
Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius; always factionary of the party of your general.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

FACTIOUS. adj. [factiosus, French.]
1. Given to faction; loud and violent in a party; publicly dissensionous; addicted to form parties and raise public disturbances.
He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Be factious for redress of all these griefs.
Shakespeare, Jul. Caesar.

2. Proceeding from public dissensions; tending to public discord.
Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,
Assemble; and harangues are heard; but soon
In factious opposition.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 664.
Factious tumults overbore the freedom and honour of the two houses.
King Charles.
Why these factious quarrels, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same design?
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FACTIOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally dissensionous or tumultuous.
I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also; exceeding even the desires of those that were factiously discontented.
King Charles.

FACTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from factious.] Inclination to public dissension; violent clamorousness for a party.

FACTITIOUS. adj. [factitious, Latin.] Made by art, in opposition to what is made by nature.
In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, are easily brought to incorporate.
Boyle.
Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist.
Ray on the Creation.

FACTOR. n. f. [facteur, French; factor, Latin.]
1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.
Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain.
Shakespeare, Richard III.
Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
'T'engross up glorious deeds on my behalf.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
You all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods.
Shakespeare, Anthony and Cleopatra.
We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate.
Raleigh's Apology.
It was conceived that the Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doubtless at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade.
Hayward.
Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some sly and venomous factors for the old republican cause.
South's Sermons.
All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, sects and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that therefore they ought to be takett away.

South's Sermons.

Forc'd into exile from his rightful throne,
He made all countries where he came his own;
And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway,
A royal factor for their kingdoms lay.
Dryden.

2. [In arithmetick.] The multiplicator and multiplicand.
Harris.

FACTORY. n. f. [from factor.]
1. A house or district inhabited by traders in a distant country.
2. The traders embodied in one place.

FACTOTUM. n. f. [factotum, Latin.] It is used likewise in burlesque French. A servant employed alike in all kinds of business: as Scrub in the Stratagem.

FACTURE. n. f. [French.] The act or manner of making any thing.

FACULTY. n. f. [facultis, French; facultas, Latin.]
1. The power of doing any thing; ability whether corporal or intellectual.
There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things.
Hooker, b. i. f. 8.
Orators may grieve; for in their sides,
Rather than heads, their faculty abides.
Denham.
Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem.
L'Estrange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.
For well I understand in the prime end
Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind
And inward faculties, which most excel.
Milt. Parad. Lost.
In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind.
Locke.
Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present.
Swift.

3. [In physics.] A power or ability to perform any action natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished and augmented, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind.
Quincy.

4. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.
He had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling men to him.
Clarendon, b. viii.
A sober man would have wondered how our author found out monarchical absolute power in that text, had he not had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not shew it others.
Locke.
He had an excellent faculty in preaching, if he were not too refined.
Swift.

5. Quality; disposition or habit of good or ill.
I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

6. Power; authority.
This Duncan
Hath born his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

7. Privilege; right to do any thing.
Law hath set down to what persons, in what causes, with what circumstances, almost every faculty or favour shall be granted.
Hooker, b. v.

8. Faculty, in an university, denotes the masters and professors of the several sciences: as, a meeting of the faculty or faculties.

FACUND. adj. [facundus, Latin.] Eloquent.
Diſt.

TO FADDE. v. n. [corrupted from To fiddle, or toy with the fingers.] To trifle; to toy; to play.

TO FADE. v. n. [fade, French, inlpid, languid.]
1. To tend from greater to less vigour; to grow weak; to languish.
2. To tend from a brighter to a weaker colour.
The greenness of a leaf ought to pass for apparent, because soon fading into a yellow, it scarce lasts at all, in comparison of the greenness of an emerald.
Boyle on Colours.
The spots in this stone are of the same colour throughout, even to the very edges; there being an immediate transition from white to black, and the colours not fading or declining gradually.
Woodward on Poffils.

3. To wither: as a vegetable.
Ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water.
J. i. 30.

4. To die away gradually; to vanish; to be worn out.
Where either through the temper of the body, or some other default, the memory is very weak, ideas in the mind quickly fade.
Locke.
The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years.
Addison, Cato.

5. To

F A I

5. To be naturally not durable; to be transient; easily to lose vigour or beauty.
The glorious beauty on the head of the fat valley shall be a fading flower.
The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.
Narcissus' change, to the vain virgin throws
Who trusts to beauty, trusts the fading rose. Gay's Pan.
To FADE. v. a. To wear away; to reduce to languor; to deprive of freshness or vigour; to wither.
This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, withered;
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakespeare.
His palms, though under weights they did not stand, Still thriv'd; no Winter could his laurels fade. Dryden.
Restless anxiety, forlorn despair,
And all the faded family of care. Garth's Dispenf.
To FADGE. v. n. [geezan, Saxon; fagen, German.]
1. To fuit; to fit; to have one part consistent with another.
How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly,
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakespeare.
2. To agree; not to quarrel; to live in amity.
When they thriv'd they never fadg'd,
But only by the cars engag'd;
Like dogs that snarl about a bone,
And play together when they've none. Hudibras, p. iii.
3. To succeed; to hit.
The fox had a fetch; and when he saw it would not fadge, away goes he presently. L'Estrange's Fables.
4. This is a mean word not now used, unless perhaps in ludicrous and low compositions.
FADGES. n. f. [Latin.] Excrements; but often used to express the ingredients and settlings after distillation and infusion. Quincy.
To FAG. v. a. [fatigo, Latin.] To grow weary; to faint with weariness.
Creighton witheld his force till the Italian begun to fag, and then brought him to the ground. Mackenzie's Lives.

fagend of business, they are apt to look not kindly upon those who go before them. Cullier of Ervy.
FAGOT. n. f. [fagot, Welsh and Armorick; fagot, French.]
1. A bundle of sticks bound together for the fire.
About the pile of fagots, sticks and hay,
The bellows raised the newly kindled flame. Fairfax, b. ii.
Spare for no fagots, let there be enow;
Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Mitres or fagots have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables or not. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. A bundle of sticks for any purpose.
The black prince filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with fascines. Addis. Spectator.
3. A soldier numbered in the muster-roll, but not really existing.
To FAGOT. v. a. [from the noun] To tie up; to bundle together.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But fagoted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well. Dryden.
To FAILE. v. n. [failler, French; faeln, Welsh. Pezron.]
1. To be deficient; to cease from former plenty; to fall short;
not to be equal to demand or use.
The waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up. Job xiv. 11.
Where the credit and money fail, barter alone must do. Locke.

before me. If. lii. 16.

F A I

6. To decay; to decline; to languish.
Mine eyes fail. Pf. cxix. 32.
I perceive
Thy mortal fight to fail: objects divine Must needs impair and weary human sense. Milt. Par. Lost.
7. To miss; not to produce its effect.
Consider of deformity not as a sign which is deceivable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Bacon's Essays.
This jest was first of th' other house's making,
And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking. Dryden.
A persuasion that we shall overcome any difficulties, that we meet with in the sciences, seldom fails to carry us through them. Locke.
He does not remember whether every grain came up or not; but he thinks that very few fail'd. Mortimer's Husband.
8. To miss; not to succeed in a design.
I am enjoin'd, by oath, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
In difficulties of state, the true reason of failing proceeds from failings in the administration. L'Estrange.
Men who have been busied in the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, have fail'd in their design. Addison's Guardian.
9. To be deficient in duty.
Endeavour to fulfill God's commands, to repent as often as you fail of it, and to hope for pardon and acceptance of him.
Wake's Preparation for Death.
To FAIL. v. a.
1. To desert; not to continue to assist or supply.
The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when fortune fails them. Sidney, b. ii.
So hast thou oft with guile thine honour bent;
But little may such guile thee now avail.
If wanted force and fortune do not much me fail. Fai. Qu.
There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars, mens hearts failing them for fear. Lu. xxi. 26.
Her heart fail'd her, and she would fain have compounded for her life. L'Estrange.
He presumes upon his parts that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand. Locke.
2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.
Since nature fails us in no needful thing,
Why want I means my inward self to see? Davies.
3. To omit; not to perform.
The inventive god who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.
4. To be wanting to.
There shall not fail thee a man on the throne. 1 Kings ii. 4.
FAIL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Misfortune; miss; unsuccessfulness.
2. Omission; non-performance.
Mark and perform it, seest thou? for the fail
Of any point in't shall not only be Death to thyself, but to thy lewd-tongu'd wife. Shakespeare.
He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites. Job. iii. 10.
3. Deficiency; want.
4. Death; extinction.
How grounded he his title to the crown
Upon our fail? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
FAYLING. n. f. [from fail.] Deficiency; imperfection; faults not atrocious; lapse.
Besides what failings may be in the matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obscurities. Digby.
To failings mild, but zealous for desert;
The clearest head, and the sincerest heart. Pope.
Even good men have many temptations to subdue, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.
FAILURE. n. f. [from fail.]
1. Deficiency; cessation.
There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the Summer season. Woodward's N. Hist.
2. Omission; non-performance; slip.
He that, being subject to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his cloaths, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprised with a fit; he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory. South's Sermons.
3. A lapse; a slight fault.
FAIL. adj. [faeln, Saxon.]
1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense.
And in her hand she held a mirror bright,
Wherein her face she often view'd fail. Fairy Queen.
My lips will be fail when I sing unto thee, and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered. Psalms lxxi.
2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions; as, I was fail to do this, would equally

F A I

- equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]
Every weight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fail.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 1. Stan. 6.
Whoever will hear, he shall find God; whoever will study to know, shall be also fail to believe. Hooker, b. v.
I was fail to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
When Hildebrand had accused Henry IV. there were none so hardy as to defend their lord; wherefore he was fail to humble himself before Hildebrand. Raleigh's Essays.
The learned Castilio was fail to make trenchers at Balle, to keep himself from starving. Locke.
FAIN. adv. [from the adjective.] Gladly; very desirously; according to earnest wishes.
Now I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground: I would fain die a dry death. Shakespeare.
Why would'st thou urge me to confess a flame
I long have stifled, and would fain conceal. Addison's Cato.
Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse,
And show th' immortal labours in my verse. Addison.
The plebeians would fain have a law enacted to lay all mens rights and privileges upon the same level. Swift.
To FAIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To wish; to desire fondly.
Fairer than fairest, in his faining eye,
Whole sole aspect he counts felicity. Spenser on Love.
To FAINT. v. n. [fainer, French.]

Faint heart never won fair lady. Proverb in Camden's Rem.
Our faint Egyptians pray for Antony;
But in their servile hearts they own Octavius. Dryden.
6. Dejected; depressed.
Consider him that endureth such contradiction against himself, left ye be wearied and faint in your minds. Hebr. xii. 3.
7. Not vigorous; not active.
The defects which hindered the conquest, were the faint prosecution of the war, and the looseness of the civil government. Davies on Ireland.
FAINTHEARTED. adj. [faint and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; dejected; easily depressed.
Fear not, neither be fainthearted for the two tails of these smoking firebrands. If. vii. 4.
They should resolve the next day as victorious conquerors to take the city, or else there as fainthearted cowards to end their days. Knales's History of the Turks.

F A I

- Now the late fainthearted rout,
O'erthrown and scatter'd round about,
Chac'd by the horror of their fear,
From bloody fray of knight and bear,
Took heart again and fac'd about,
As if they meant to stand it out. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.
Villain, stand off! base, groveling, worthless wretches, Mongrels in faction; poor fainthearted traitors. Addis. Cato.

fusions. Wise's Surgery.
FAINTISHNESS. n. f. [from faint.] Weakness in a slight degree; incipient debility.
A certain degree of heat lengthens and relaxes the fibres; whence proceeds the sensation of faintness and debility in a hot day. Arbutnot on Air.
FAINTING. adj. [from faint.] Timorous; feeble-minded.
A burlesque or low word.
There's no having patience, thou art such a faintling filly creature. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
FAINTLY. adv. [from faint.]
1. Feebly; languidly.
Love's like a torch, which, if secur'd from blasts,
Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts:
Expos'd to storms of jealousy and doubt,
The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out. Walsh.
2. Not in bright colours.
Nature affords at least a glimmering light;
The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn right. Pope.
3. Without force of representation.
I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly;
nothing like the image and horror of it. Shakespeare, King Lear.
An obscure and confused idea represents the object so faintly, that it doth not appear plain to the mind. Watts.
4. Without strength of body.
With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey,
His warm breath blows her flix up as she lies. Dryden.
5. Not vigorously; not actively.
Though still the famish'd English, like pale ghosts, Faintly besiege us one hour in a month. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
6. Timorously; with dejection; without spirit.
Loth was the ape, though praised, to adventure;
Yet faintly 'gan into his work to enter. Hubbard's Tale.
He faintly now declines the fatal strife;
So much his love was dearer than his life. Denham.
FAINTNESS. n. f. [from faint.]
1. Languor; feebleness; want of strength.
If the prince of the lights of heaven, which now as a giant doth run his unwearied courses, should through a languishing faintness begin to stand. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.
This proceeded not from any violence of pain, but from a general languishing and faintness of spirits, which made him think nothing worth the trouble of one careful thought. Temple.
2. Inactivity; want of vigour.
This evil proceeds rather of the unsoundness of the counsels laid for the reformation, or of faintness in following and effecting the same, than of any such fatal course appointed of God. Spenser's State of Ireland.
3. Timorousness; dejection.
The paleness of this flow'r Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart. Shak. Ham. VI.

litated; enfeebled.
When Winter frosts constrain the field with cold,
The faint root can take no steady hold. Dryd. Virg. Georg.
The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire:
The faint knights were scorched, and knew not where
To run for shelter; for no shade was near. Dryden.
FAIR. adj. [faegen, Saxon; faur, Danish.]
1. Beautiful; elegant of feature; handsome. Fair seems in the common acceptation to be restrained, when applied to women, to the beauty of the face.
Thou art a fair woman to look upon. Gen. xii. 11.
My decay'd fair,
A funny look of his will soon repair. Shak. Comed. of Err.
2. Not black; not brown; white in the complexion.
I never yet saw man,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister;
If black, why, nature, drawing of an antic,
Made a foul blot. Shak. Much Ado about Nothing.
Let us look upon men in several climates: the Ethiopians are black, flat-nosed, and crisp-haired: the Moors tawny; the Northern people large, and fair complexioned. Hale.

F A I

3. Pleasing to the eye; beautiful in general.
Carry him gently to my fairest chamber,
And hang it round with all my wanton pictures. Shakespeare.

branches. Ezek. xxxi. 7.
 4. Clear; pure.
A standard of a damask-rose, with the root on, was set in a chamber where no fire was, upright in an earthen pan, full of fair water, half a foot under the water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Even fair water, falling upon white paper or linnen, will immediately alter the colour of them, and make it fadder than that of the unwetted parts. Boyle on Colours.
 5. Not cloudy; not foul; not tempestuous.
Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Fair weather cometh out of the earth. Job xxxvii. 22.
About three of the clock in the afternoon the weather was very fair and very warm. Clarendon, b. viii.
 6. Favourable; prosperous: as, a fair wind.
In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may wait him over. Prior.
 7. Likely to succeed.
Yourself, renowned prince, stood as fair
As any comer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
The Caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out. Raleigh's Essays.
O pity and shame! that they who to live well
Enter'd to fair, should turn aside to tread Paths indirect, or in the midway faint. Milt. Paradise Lost.
 8. Equal; just.
The king did so much desire a peace, that no man need advise him to it, or could divert him from it, if fair and honourable conditions of peace were offered to him. Clarendon.
9. Not effected by any insidious or unlawful methods; not foul.
After all these conquests he pass'd the rest of his age in his own native country, and died a fair and natural death. Temple.
10. Not practising any fraudulent or insidious arts: as, a fair rival, a fair disputant.
Virtuous and vicious ev'ry man must be,
Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree;
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wife,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise. Pope.
 11. Open; direct.
For still, methought, she sung not far away;
At last I found her on a laurel-spray:
Close by my side she sat, and fair in sight,
Full in a line, against her opposite. Dryden.
 12. Gentle; mild; not compulsory.
All the lords came in, and, being by fair means wrought therunto, acknowledged King Henry. Spenser on Ireland.
For to reduce her by main force,
Is now in vain; by fair means, worse. Hudibras, p. iii.
 13. Mild; not severe.
Not only do't degrade them, or remit
To life obscur'd, which were a fair dismissal;
But throw't them lower than thou did'st exalt them high.
Milton's Agonistes.
 14. Pleasing; civil.
Good sir, why do you start, and seem to fear Things that do found so fair? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
When fair words and good counsel will not prevail upon us, we must be frighted into our duty. L'Estrange.
 15. Equitable; not injurious.
His doom is fair,
That dust I am, and shall to dust return. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 16. Commodious; easy.
Henceby, upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand where you may make the fairest shoot. Shakespeare.
- FAIR. adv. [from the adjective.]
1. Gently; decently; without violence.
He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one, though he gallop. Locke.
 2. Civilly; complaisantly.
Well, you must now speak fir John Falstaff fair. Shakespeare.
One of the company spoke him fair, and would have stop't his mouth with a crust. L'Estrange, Fable 2.1.
In this plain fable you th' effect may see
Of negligence, and fond credulity;
And learn besides of flatterers to beware,
Then most pernicious when they speak too fair. Dryden.
His promise Palamon accepts; but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made:
Thus fair they parted 'till the morrow's dawn;
For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn. Dryden.
Kalib ascend, my fair spoke servant rise,
And sooth my heart with pleasing prophecies. Dryd. In Emp.
This promised fair at first. Addison on Italy.
 3. Happily; successfully.
O, princely Buckingham, I'll kiss thy hand,

F A I

- In sign of league and amity with thee:
Now fair befall thee and thy noble house!
Thy garments are not spotted with our blood. Shak. R. III.
4. On good terms.
There are other nice, though inferior cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier of Popularity.
- FAIR. n. f.
1. A beauty; elliptically a fair woman.
Of sleep forsaken, to relieve his care,
He fought the conversation of the fair. Dryden's Fables.
Gentlemen who do not deign to marry, yet pay their devoirs to one particular fair. Spectator, No. 288.
 2. Honefty; just dealing.
I am not much for that present; we'll settle it between ourselves: fair and square, Nic, keeps friends together. Arbutnot.
FAIR. n. f. [from faire, French; feries, or forum, Latin.] An annual or stated meeting of buyers and sellers; a time of traffic more frequented than a market. The privilege of holding fairs in England is granted by the king.
With silver, iron, tin and lead they traded in thy fairs. Ezek. xxvii. 12.
- His corn, his cattle, were his only care,
And his supreme delight a country fair. Dryden.
The ancient Nundina, or fairs of Rome, were kept every ninth day: afterwards the same privileges were granted to the country markets, which were at first under the power of the consuls. Arbutnot on Coins.
- FAIRING. n. f. [from fair.] A present given at a fair.
Sweetheart, we shall be rich ere we depart,
If fairings come thus plentifully in. Shakel. Love's Lab. Lost.
What pretty things they are, we wonder at!
Like children that esteem every trifle,
And prefer a fairing before their fathers:
What difference is between us and them?
That we are dearer fools, cockcombs at A higher rate. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
Now he goes on, and sings of fairs and shows;
For still new fairs before his eyes arose:
How pedlars stalls with glittering toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country maid. Gay's Pastorals.
- FAIRLY. adv. [from fair.]
1. Beautifully: as, a city fairly situated.
 2. Commodiously; conveniently; suitably to any purpose or design.
Waiting 'till willing winds their sails supply'd,
Within a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side. Dryden.
 3. Honeftly; justly; without shift; without fraud.
To the first advantages we may fairly lay claim; I wish we had as good a title to the latter. Atterbury's Sermons.
It is a church of England man's opinion, that the freedom of a nation consists in an absolute unlimited legislative power, wherein the whole body of the people are fairly represented, and in an executive duly limited. Swift.
 4. Ingenuously; plainly; openly.
The stage how loofely does Adrea tread,
Who fairly puts all characters to bed. Pope's Epist. of Hor.
 5. Candidly; without sinister interpretations.
As I interpret fairly your design,
So look not with severer eyes on mine. Dryden's Aurenga.
 6. Without violence to right reason.
Where I have enlarged them, I desire the false critics would not always think that those thoughts are wholly mine; but that either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.
This nutritious juice being a subtle liquor, scarce obtainable by a human body, the serum of the blood is fairly substituted in its place. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 7. Without blots.
Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a set hand fairly is engros'd. Shakel. Rich. III.
 8. Completely; without any deficiency.
All this they fairly overcame, by reason of the continual presence of their king. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Let them say, 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Our love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fait it fairly out. Shak. Tam. of the Shrove.
- FAIRNESS. n. f. [from fair.]
1. Beauty; elegance of form.
That which made her fairness much the fairer, was that it was but a fair ambassador of a most fair mind, full of wit, and a wit which delighted more to judge itself than to show itself. Sidney.
 2. Honefty; candour; ingenuity.
There may be somewhat of wisdom, but little of goodness or fairness in this conduct. Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.
- FAIRSPOKEN. adj. [from fair and speak.] Bland and civil in language and address.
Arius, a priest in the church of Alexandria, a subtlewitted and

F A I

- and a marvellous fairspoken man, but discontented that we should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.
- FAIRY. n. f. [from faerie, Saxon; fee, French.]
Ab fae, terra, fit & piea Macedonum dialecto; unde evgoi tyreoi, & Romanis inferi, qui Scoto-Saxonibus dicuntur series, nostratq; vulgo corruptius fairies, καταχρηστικὸν δαιμονίων, five dii manes. Baxter's Glossary.
1. A kind of fabled beings supposed to appear in a diminutive human form, and to dance in the meadows, and reward cleanliness in houses; an elf; a fay.
Nan Page, my daughter, and my little son,
And three or four more of their growth, we'll drefs
Like urchins, ouphes, and fairies, green and white,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands. Shakel. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Then let them all encircle him about,
And fairly like too pinch the unclean knight;
And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread
In shape prophane. Shakel. Merry Wives of Windsor.
By the idea any one has of fairies, or centaurs, he cannot know that things, answering those ideas, exist. Locke.
Fays, fairies, geni, elves, and demons hear. Pope.
 2. Enchantress. Warburton.
To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks blefs thee. Shakel. Anth. and Cleopatra.
- FAIRY. adj.
1. Given by fairies.
Be secret and discrete; these fairy favours
Are lost when not conceal'd. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Such borrowed wealth, like fairy money, though it were gold in the hand from which he received it, will be but leaves and dust when it comes to use. Locke.
 2. Belonging to fairies.
This is the fairy land: oh, spight of spights,
We talk with goblins, owls, and elvish spights. Shakel.
- FAIRYSTONE. n. f. [from fairy and stone.] It is found in gravel-pits, being of an hemispherical figure; hath five double lines arising from the centre of its basis, which meet in the pole.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- FAITH. n. f. [from foi, French; fide, Italian; fides, Latin.]
1. Belief of the revealed truths of religion.
The name of faith being properly and strictly taken, it must needs have reference unto some uttered word, as the object of belief. Hooker, b. ii. f. 4.
Faith, if it have not works, is dead. Jam. ii. 17.
Vision in the next life is the perfecting of that faith in this life, or that faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
Then faith shall fail, and holy hope shall die;
One lost in certainty, and one in joy. Prior.
 2. The system of revealed truths held by the Christian church;
the credo.
Felix heard Paul concerning the faith. Acts xxiv. 24.
This is the catholic faith. Common Prayer.
 3. Trust in God.
Faith is an entire dependence upon the truth, the power, the justice, and the mercy of God; which dependence will certainly incline us to obey him in all things. Swift.
 4. Tenet held.
Which to believe of her,
Must be a faith, that reason, without miracle,
Should never plant in me. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 5. Trust in the honefty or veracity of another.
 6. Fidelity; unshaken adherence.
Her failings, while her faith to me remains,
I should conceal, and not expose to blame
By my complaint. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 129.
 7. Honour; social confidence.
For you alone
I broke my faith with injur'd Palamon. Dryd. Knight's Tale.

They are a very froward generation, children in whom is no faith. Deutr. xxxii. 20.
 9. Promise given.
I have been forsworn,
In breaking faith with Julia whom I lov'd. Shakespeare.
- FAITHBREACH. n. f. [from faith and breach.] Breach of fidelity;
disloyalty; perfidy.
Now minutely revolts upbraids his faithbreach;
Thofe he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- FAITHED. adj. [from faith.] Honefty; sincere. A word not in use.
Thou bastard! would the repofal
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee,
Make thy words faith'd? Shakespeare's King Lear.

It has been my misfortune to live among quarrelsome neighbours: there is but one thing can make us fall out, and that is the inheritance of lord Strut's estate. Arbutnot's John Bull.
57. To FALL out. To happen; to befall.
Who think you is my Dorus fallen out to be? Sidney.
Now, for the most part, it falls out, touching things which generally are received, that although in themselves they be most certain, yet, because men presume them granted of all, we are hardest able to bring proof of their certainty. Hooker.
It fell out, that certain players
We o'er-rode on the way; of those we told him. Shakespeare.
Yet so it may fall out, because their end
Is hate, not help to me. Milton's Agonistes.
There fell out a bloody quarrel betwixt the frogs and the mice. L'Estrange, Fable 41.

F A L

- If it fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surpris'd, as if some unexpected thing had happened. Villoison, Sermon 5.
58. To FALL to. To begin eagerly to eat.
The men were falling to in a larger mould,
The women fit for labour, big and bold;
Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run;
Fall to, with eager joy, on homely food. Dryden's Juven.
59. To FALL to. To apply himself to.
They would needs fall to the practice of those virtues which they before learned. Sidney, b. ii.
I know thee not, old man; fall to thy prayers:
How ill white hairs become a fool and jester! Shak. H. IV.
Having been brought up an idle horseboy, he will never after fall to labour; but is only made fit for the halter. Spenser.
They fell to raising money under pretence of the relief of Ireland.
My lady falls to play: so bad her chance,
He must repair it. Pope's Epist.
60. To FALL under. To be subject to; to become the object of.
We know the effects of heat will be such as will scarce fall under the conceit of man, if the force of it be altogether kept in. Bacon's Natural History, N. 99.
Those things which are wholly in the choice of another, fall under our deliberation. Taylor's Rule of living boy.
The idea of the painter and the sculptor is undoubtedly that perfect and excellent example of the mind, by imitation of which imagined form all things are represented, which fall under human light. Dryden's Dufrenoy.
61. To FALL under. To be ranged with; to be reckoned with.
No rules that relate to pastoral can affect the Georgicks, which fall under that class of poetry which consists in giving plain instructions to the reader. Addison on the Georgicks.
62. To FALL upon. To attack; to invade; to assault.
Auria falling upon these galleys, had with them a cruel and deadly fight. Knolles.
An infection in a town first falls upon children, weak constitutions, or those that are subject to other diseases; but, spreading further, seizes upon the most healthy. Temple.
Man falls upon every thing that comes in his way; not a berry or a muskrom can escape him. Addison's Spectator.
To get rid of fools and scoundrels was one part of my design in falling upon these authors. Pope to Swift.
63. To FALL upon. To attempt.
I do not intend to fall upon nice philosophical disquisitions about the nature of time. Holder on Time.
64. To FALL upon. To rush against.
At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison's Spectator.
This is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart, or correlative.
- To FALL, v. a.
1. To drop; to let fall.
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die. Shak. Rich. III.
If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop, the falls, would prove a crocodile. Shak. Othello.
Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo. Shakespeare's Tempest.
I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryd.
2. To sink; to deprecate.
If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without halves, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it. Bacon's Natural History.
3. To diminish in value; to let sink in price.
Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.
4. To yearn; to bring forth.
They then conceiving, did in yearning time
Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. Shakespeare.
- FALL, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of dropping from on high.
High o'er their heads a mould ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast. Dryd. En.
2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.
I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so let his teeth, and did tear it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. The

F A L

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.
My son coming into his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died. 2 Esdr. x. 48.
Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a stop, or otherwise, stayeth above; and if once mingled, it severeth not again, as oil doth. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
A fever or fall may take away my reason. Locke.
Some were hurt with the falls they got by leaping upon the ground. Gulliver's Travels.
4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.
Wail his fall,
Whom I myself struck down. Shakef. Macbeth.
Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies. Judith viii. 9.
I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdr. viii. 17.
5. Ruin; dissolution.
Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight
Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;
Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire,
Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire. Denham.
6. Downfall; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being depopled from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness.
Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney, b. ii.
Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire
Of my restraint; why here I live alone;
And pitiest this my miserable fall. Daniel's Civil War.
He, careless now of interest, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope to Parnell.
7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.
'Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hooker, b. v. f. 41.
8. Diminution; decrease of price.
That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.
9. Declension or diminution of sound; cadence; close of music.
That strain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South
That breathes upon a bank of violets, Stealing and giving odours. Shakef. Twelfth Night.
How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night;
At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness 'till it smil'd! Milton.
10. Declivity; steep descent.
Waters when beat upon the shore, or strained, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon's Natural History, N. 115.
11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.
There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakespeare.
A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wisd. xvii.
Down through the crannies of the living walls
The crystal streams descend in murmur'ing falls. Dryd. Virg.
The swain, in barren deserts, with surprise
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts, amidst the thrifty wilds, to hear
New falls of water murmur'ing in his ear. Pope's Messiah.
Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost,
For ever, ever, ever lost!
The outlet of a current into any other water.
Before the fall of the Po into the gulph, it receives into its channel the most considerable rivers of Piedmont, Milan, and the rest of Lombardy. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
13. Autumn; the fall of the leaf; the time when the leaves drop from the trees.
What crowds of patients the town-doctor kills,
Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills. Dryden's Juven.
14. Any thing that falls in great quantities.
Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples. L'Estrange.
15. The act of felling or cutting down: as, the fall of timber.
FALLACIOUS, adj. [fallax, Latin; fallacious, French.]

F A L

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.
They believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as were the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies. South's Sermons.
2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.
Soon as the force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapour bland
About their spirits had play'd, and inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
False philosophy inspires Fallacious hope. Milton.
- FALLACIOUSLY, adv. [from fallacious.] Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unsound reasoning.
We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refute us. Brown.
We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of. Addison.
- FALLACIOUSNESS, n. f. [from fallacious.] Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.
- FALLACY, n. f. [fallacia, Latin; fallace, French.] Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.
Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument; thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected. Sidney, b. ii.
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy. Shak. Comedy of Errors.
It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies. Dryden.
- FALLIBILITY, n. f. [from fallible.] Liableness to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.
There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet there are some things we may be almost as certain of as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred. Watt's Logic.
- FALLIBLE, adj. [fallis, Latin.] Liable to error; such as may be deceived.
Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, shall often fail in his expectations. Taylor's Rule of living boy.
- Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state. Watt.
- FALLING, n. f. [from fall.] Indentings opposed to prominence.
It shows the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominences and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of figure. Addison on ancient Medals.
- FALLINGSICKNESS, n. f. [fall and sickness.] The epilepsy; a disease in which the patient is without any warning deprived at once of his senses, and falls down.
Did Caesar swoon?—He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.—He hath the falling-sickness. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
- The dogfisher is good against the falling-sickness. Walton.
- FALLOW, adj. [falepe, Saxon.]
1. Pale red, or pale yellow.
How does your fallow greyhound, sir?
I heard say, he was out-run at Cotfale. Shakespeare.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer between Richmond and Hampton-court. Clarendon.
2. Unfowed; left to rest after the years of tillage. [Supposed to be so called from the colour of naked ground.]
The ridges of the fallow field lay traversed, so as the English must cross them in presenting the charge. Hayward.
3. Plowed; but not sowed; plowed as prepared for a second aration.
Her predecessors, in their course of government, did but sometimes cast up the ground; and so leaving it fallow, it became quickly overgrown with weeds. Hewel's Vocal Forrester.
4. Unplowed; uncultivated.
Her fallow lets
The darnel, hemlock, and rank sumitory, Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
5. Unoccupied; neglected.
Shall saints in civil bloodshed wallow
Of saints, and let the cause lie fallow. Hudibras, p. i. c. 2.
- FALLOW, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Ground plowed in order to be plowed again.
The plowing of fallows is a very great benefit to land.
They are the best ploughs to plow up Summer fallow with. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Ground

FAL

2. Ground lying at rest.
Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Built for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook,
By nature's own contrivance seems dispos'd. Row's J. Shore.
To FALLOW. v. n. To plow in order to a second plowing.
Begin to plow up fallows: this first fallowing ought to be very shallow. Mortimer's Husbandry.
But the ground ought to be well plowed and fallowed the Summer before. Mortimer.
FALLOWNESS. n. f. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.
Like one, who, in her third widowhood, doth profess Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness, Donne.
S' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness.
FALSE. adj. [falsus, Latin; faux, fausse, French.]
1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.
Innocence shall make
False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
There are false witnesses among men. L'Estrange.
2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.
For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue
Of ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?
Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As, loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew. Davies.
A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture:
the persons and action of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind. Dryden's Duressney.
3. Superstitious; succedaneous.
Take a vessel, and make a false bottom of coarse canvass:
fill it with earth above the canvass. Bacon's Nat. History.
4. Deceiving expectation.
The heart of man looks fair to the eye; but when we come to lay any weight upon't, the ground is false under us.
L'Estrange, Fable 54.
5. Not agreeable to rule, or propriety.
Now, fy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate. Shakespeare's Henry V.
6. Not honest; not just.
What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance.
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
Men are sponges, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive. Donne.
7. Treacherous; perfidious; traitorous; deceitful; hollow.
I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand. Shakespeare.
A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon's Henry VII.
So hast thou cheated Thefeus with a wife,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free. Dryden.
The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryd. Virg. Æn. Ded.
8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real.
False tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden's Æn. b. ii.
9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.
To FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To violate by failure of veracity.
Is't not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsed hast thy faith with perjury. Fairy Queen, b. i.
2. To deceive.
Fair seemly pleasure each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his falsed fancy he, her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. Fairy Queen, b. i.
3. To defeat; to balk; to shift; to evade, as fencers commonly do.
But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wife, and closely did await Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes thwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed oft his blows t' illude him with such bait. F. Q.
4. This word is now out of use.
FALSHEARTED. adj. [fals and heart.]
1. Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.
The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsehearted friends

- and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
FALSHOOD. n. f. [from fals.]
1. Want of truth; want of veracity.
All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falshood passing from words to things. South's Sermons.
2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.
3. A lie; a false assertion.
FALSHELY. adv. [from fals.]
1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.
Simcon and Levi spake not only falsely but infidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing profelytes and religion. Gov. of Tongue.
Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim. Dryd. Ann. Mir.
Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely, for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request. Dryd. Aur.
Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret resentments. Addison's Spectator.
2. Erroneously; by mistake.
He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalridge's Sermons.
3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.
FALSHESS. n. f. [from fals.]
1. Contrariety to truth.
2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.
Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson, Sermon 3.
3. Duplicit; deceit; double dealing.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all fals-ness or foulness of intentions, especially to peronated devotion. Hammond's Fundamentals.
4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.
King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness. Shak. H. IV.
The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the fals-ness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.
FALSER. n. f. [from fals.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.
Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain,
That of such falsers friendship been fain. Spenser's Pastoral.
FALSIFIER. n. f. [from falsify.] Liable to be counter-feited or corrupted.
FALSIFICATION. n. f. [falsification, French, from falsify.]
1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.
Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, witting-ly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not,
is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker, b. iii. f. 5.
To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour. Bacon.
2. Confutation.
The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this idle, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Notes on the Odyssey.
FALSIFIER. n. f. [from falsify.]
1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.
It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs. Boyle.
2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.
Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their flams the worst together. L'Estrange's Fables.
To FALSIFY. v. a. [falsifier, French.]
1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.
We cannot excuse that church, which either through corrupt translations of Scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, propoeth that to the people of God as Scripture which is in truth no Scripture.
Hooker, b. v. f. 19.
The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man. Spenser on Ireland.
2. To

FAM

2. To confute; to prove false.
Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.
3. To violate; to break by falshood.
It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney, b. ii.
He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously flew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falshood of the pyrate. Knolles's History of the Turks.
This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trust. Deay of Piety.
4. To pierce; to run through.
His crest is rasi'd away, his ample shield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'lins fill'd. Dryden's Æn.
Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus. My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language.
The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I use the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:
Ma si l'Ubergio d'Ambr era perfetto,
Che mai poter tallarlo in nessun canto. Ariosto, cant. xxvi.
Falsify cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified; for his shield was falsified, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.
Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalize the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.
To FALSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.
This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South's Sermons.
FALSIFY. n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]
1. Falshood; contrariety to truth.
Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsify the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker, b. v. f. 49.
Can you on him such falsities obtrude?
And as a mortal the most wise delude? Sandys's Paraphrase.
Probability does not properly make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding.
South's Sermons.
2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.
That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities. Glauco, Sect. a. 20.
To FALTER. v. n. [falter, to be wanting, Spanish; vaultur, a flammer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]
1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.
With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen, b. i.
The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born founds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.
He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty. Smith.
2. To fail in any act of the body.
This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native King Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shakel. Richard II.
3. To fail in any act of the understanding.
How far idiots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Locke.
To FALTER. v. a. To sit; to cleanse. This word seems to be merely rustic or provincial.
Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, feeds and oats. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FALTERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.
To FAMBLE. v. a. [famler, Danish.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner.
FAME. n. f. [fama, Latin; φῆμα, Dorick.]
1. Celebrity; renown.

1. Domestick; relating to a family.
They range familiar to the dome. Pope.
2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.
Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shak. Hamlet.
Be not too familiar with Poin; for he misuses thy favours
so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shak.
3. Uncremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.
Kalandar freight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.
4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.
I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
Let us chuse such limbs of noble counsel,
That the great body of our state may go
In equal rank with the best govern'd nation;
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakel. Henry IV.
Our sweet
Recess, and only consolation left Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.
5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.
Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton's P. Lost.
The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.
He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation. Gulliver's Travels.
Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain;
Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope's Odyssey.
6. Common; frequent.
To a wrong hypothesis, may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.
7. Easy; unconstrained.
He unreins
His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains. Addison.
8. Too nearly acquainted.
A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation. Camden.
FAMILIAR. n. f.

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude.
2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison's Spectator.

FA'MILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your fawciness will jest upon my love. Shak. Comed. of Err.
He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tiltyard, and then he broke his head. Sh.
The governor came to us, and, after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and fat him down. Bacon's New Atlantis.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long habitude or acquaintance.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense;
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope's Ess. on Critic.

FAM'ILLE. en famille, French. In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chuse for companions tete à tete;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit whenever you will. Swift.

FA'MILY. n. f. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 354.

FA'MINE. n. f. [famine, French; fames, Latin.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our cattle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
'Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Famines have not been of late observed, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea to countries in want, but principally by the goodness of God. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryd. Indian Emp.

To FA'MISH. v. a. [from fames, Latin; famis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me?
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,
And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill
The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryd.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life.

Thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails grofs,
And famish him of breath, if not of bread. Mit. P. Lost.

To FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger.

You are all resolv'd rather to die than to famish. Sh. Coriol.

FA'MISHMENT. n. f. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank't. Hakewill on Providence.

FAMOUSITY. n. f. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity. Diët.

FA'MOUS. adj. [fameux, French; famosus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shak. Hen. VI.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown. Num. xvi. 2.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Æsch. xxiii. 10.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupogaphus. Peacham on Drawing.

FAN

I shall be nam'd among the fam'ous
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton's Agonistes.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, which was turned into English by Mr. Fairfax. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Meneceates and Menas, famous pyrates,
Make the sea serve them. Shaksp. Anthony and Cleopatra.

FA'MOUSLY. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shaksp. Rich. III.

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of, and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew's Cos.

FA'MOUSNESS. n. f. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [fanus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry. Shaksp.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with reftless art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame. Atterbury.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [Fan, French.]

Flail, strawfork, and rake with a fan that is strong. Tuff.
Asses shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Is. xxx. 24.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shak. Troil. and Cr.

For the cleaning of corn is commonly used either a wicker fan, or a fan with sails. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counfels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker.

To FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spectator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakspere's Coriolanus.

The Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakspere's Macbeth.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:
From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
'Till ev'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 432.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:
The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryd.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand
In judgment. Milton.

FANATISM. n. f. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers's Sermons.

FANATICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, Fr.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

After these appear'd
A crew, who, under names of old renown,
Oiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milt. P. L.

FANATICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine than the tumultary weapon snatch'd up by a fanatic. Decay of Piety.

FA'NCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Directed by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings?
and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

FA'NCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FA'NCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.] Addition to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FANCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασία.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakespeare, fancy's sweetest child!
In the soul

Are many lesser faculties, that serve
Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence, which gives as full satisfaction and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinity grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Mens private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon, b. viii.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison on Italy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Shakspere's Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourish'd?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling.
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakspere.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is oftentimes a ground of affection. Collier of Friendship.

6. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

FAN

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbutnot.

7. Frolick; idle scheme; vagary.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. Something that pleases or entertains.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon's Nat. History.

London-pride is a pretty fancy, and does well for borders. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To FA'NCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Spratt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FA'NCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly drefs,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryd. Juven. Sat.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh's History of the World.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleases to fancy. Swift.

FANCYMO'NGER. n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shaksp. As you like it.

FA'NCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unfound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come once to be fancy-sick, there's no cure for it. L'Estrange.

FANE. n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion.

Nor fane, nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now the seem'd. Dryden's Æn., b. vii. l. 589.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,
Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shar'd. Phillips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes. Pope.

FANFARON. n. f. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

2. A bluffer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it. L'Estr.

Virgil makes Æneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

FANFARONA'DE. n. f. [from fanfaron, French.] A bluffer; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of monsieur Bouffieus, when the earl of Portland and that general had an interview. Swift.

To FANG. v. a. [fangan, Saxon; vangen, Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch.

Deftruction fang mankind!
FANG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal; any thing like 'em.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery. Shakspere's As you like it.

Some

FAN

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs, or tusks; as boars, pikes, falmons, and dogs, though less.

Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 752.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden's Ovid, b. viii.

Then charge him close, provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting fangs to the ground.

Addison's Cato.

2. The nails; the talons.
3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses.

Boelhy's Kalendar.

FA'NGED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will address fang'd,
They bear the mandate.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,
Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain.

Phillips's Britain.

FA'NGLE. n. f. [from fang, Saxon; to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new; as, new fangles, new fanglements.

FA'NGLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gaudy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated. This is still retained in Scotland: as, he's new fangled, or whimsical, and very fond of novelty.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant.

Ascham.

A book! oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FA'NGLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.
The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his pow'r, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FA'NGOT. n. f. [] A quantity of wares; as raw silk, &c. containing from one or two hundred weight three quarters.

Dict.

FA'NNEL. n. f. [from fanon, French.] A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a male-priest when he officiates.

Dict.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan her.

Jerem.

FA'NTASIED. adj. [from fantasy.] Filled with fancies or wild imaginations.

As I travel'd hither through the land,
I found the people strangely fantasied.

Shakespeare's King John.

FANTA'SM. n. f. [See PHANTASM.]
FANTA'STICAL. adj. [from fantasy, Fr. from fantasy.]

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.
The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of.

South.

2. Substituting only in the fancy; imaginary.
Pretent feats
Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in remorse; and nothing is,
But what is not.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastical ideas of a busy imagination.

Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.
Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. Capricious; humorous; unsteady; irregular.
Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastical wheel.

Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; indulgent to one's own imagination.
They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.

Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd conceited true love knots:
To be fantastical, may become a youth
Of greater time than I.

Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Duunvir is provided with an imperious, expensive and fanfantastical mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife.

Tatler.

We are apt to think your medallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed.

Addison.

FANTA'STICAL. adj. [from fantastical.]
1. By the power of imagination.
2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with mere imagination.
One cannot so much as fantastically chuse, even or odd, he thinks not why.

Gret's Cosmol. b. ii. c. 4.

FANTA'STICALNESS. n. f. [from fantastical.]
FANTA'STICKNESS. n. f. [from fantastical.]
1. Humorousness; mere compliance with fancy.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.
I dare not assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it.

Tillotson's Preface.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.
FANTASY. n. f. [from fantasia, Latin; φαντασία.]
1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio! you tremble and look pale!
Is not this something more than fantasy?
I talk of dreams,

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy,
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more unconstant than the wind.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep the as sound as careless infancy.

Shakespeare's

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.

Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there.

Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.
And with the fugitive sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies ears to fantasy's impure.

Hubbard's Tale.

3. Humour; inclination.
I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections.

Whig.

FAR

cause the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army.

Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine.

Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain.

Milt.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy.

L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by publick voice.
The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away.

Dryden.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe.

Dryden's Pers.

Far off you view'd them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch.
These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find the quite contrary.

Locke.

'Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country, in the western world.

Addison's Ovid.

5. To a distance.
As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him.

Pf. ciii. 12.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprises without a conductor.

Raleigh.

But all in vain! which when he saw, he ceas'd
Contenting, and remov'd his tents far off.

Milt. Par. Lost.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world.

Burn. Th. of the World.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well-poiz'd javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart.

Addison's Ovid.

6. In a great part.
When they were by Jebus the day was far spent.

Judg.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees.
Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

Prov. xxxi. 10.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air.
Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the old world.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

The face of war,
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are.

Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.

Tillotson.

Latin is a more succinct language than either the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them.

Dryden.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest.

Pope.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care.

Pope's Odyssey.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakespeare.

Hooker, b. i.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

—You speak him far.
—I don't extend him, sir.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.
The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself.

Hooker, b. i.

How far forth you do like their articles. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve.

Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance.

Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it.

Tillotson.

The custom of these tongues sometimes to far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. It is used often in composition: as farfetched, farfetched.

Far-fetched.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [from far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

Far-fetched.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politick farfetched;
And from their Coptic priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mystick way to jeer us.

Hudibras, p. iii.

FAR

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [from far and fetch.]
1. Brought from places remote.
Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the farfetched spoil.

Milt. Pa. Lost.
By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the farfetched gold unto the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize.

Dryden.
2. Studiously fought; elaborately trained; not easily or naturally introduced.
York, with all his farfetched policy.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
For farfetched rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain.

Smith.
Under this head we may rank those words, which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable farfetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted.

Watt's Logick.
FAR-PIERCING. adj. [from far and pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her fire, to whose farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault, and prop the spheres.

Pope's Odyssey.
FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [from far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.

Then loud he call'd Aeneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Aeneas came;
Great Jove, he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good.

Dryden's Aen.

FAR. adj.
1. Distant; remote.
But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Behemoth the scorching or the freezing zone;
And some to far Oasis shall be sold,
Or try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold.

Dryden's Virgil.
2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.

These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds.

Shakespeare.
If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived.

Raleigh's History of the World.
3. From FAR. In this sense is used elliptically for a far or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth.

Deutr. xxvii. 49.
4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.
No true Egyptian ever knew in horses
The far side from the near.

Dryden's Cicerone.
FAR. n. f. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow; young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loss of the far of the sow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow.

Tuff.
TO FARCE. v. a. [from farce, Latin; farciar, French.]
1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their first pretended founder, or at least it ministered some stuff to the farcing of that fable.

Carew.
2. To extend; to swell out

FAR

Who would fare del bear,
To groan and sweat under a weary life? Shakeſp. Hamlet.
To FARE. v. n. [farjan, Saxon; varen, Dutch.]
1. To go; to paſs; to travel.
At laſt, reſolving forward ſtill to fare,
Until the bluſting ſtorm is overblown. Fairy Queen, b. i.
His ſpirits pure were ſubject to our fight,
Like to a man in ſhew and ſhape he *fare*d. Fairfax.
So on he *fare*s, and to the border comes
Of Eden. Milton's Paraſiſe Loſt, b. iv. l. 131.
Sadly they far'd along the ſea-beat ſhore;
Still heav'd their hearts. Pope.
2. To be in any ſtate good or bad.
So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend. Fairy Queen.
A ſtubborn heart ſhall fare evil at the laſt. Eccleſ. iii. 26.
Well fare the hand, which to our humble fight
Prefents that beauty, which the dazzling light
Of royal ſplendor. Waller.
So in this throng bright ſachariſſa far'd,
Oppreſ'd by thoſe who ſtrove to be her guard;
As ſhips, though never ſo obſequious, fall
Foul in a tempeſt on their admiral. Waller.
So *fare*s the ſtag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Denb.
But as a barque, that in foul weather,
Toſ'd by two adverſe winds together,
Is bruſ'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppoſe. Hudibras, p. i.
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare. L'Eſtrange.
Thus *fare*s the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidſt the crowd. Dryden's Æn.
Engliſh miniſters never fare ſo well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and ani-moſities of the nation, and turns their efforts upon the common enemy. Addiſon's Freeholder, N^o. 49.
Some give out there is no danger at all; others are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they ſhall fare no worſe than their neighbours. Swift.
3. To proceed in any train of conſequences good or bad.
Thus it fareth when too much deſire of contradiction cauſeth our ſpeeches rather to paſs by number than to ſtay for weight. Hooker, b. ii. ſ. 5.
So *fare*s it when with truth falſehood contends. Milton.
4. To happen to any one well or ill. With it preceding in an imperſonal form.
When the hand finds itſelf well warmed and covered, let it reſuſe the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head, till the body be ſtarved or killed, and then we ſhall ſee how it will fare with the hand. South's Sermons.
5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.
The rich man *fare*d ſumptuouſly every day. Luke.
Feaſt your ears with the muſick awhile, if they will fare ſo haſtily as on the trumpet's ſound. Shakeſp. Timon.
Men think they have *fare*d hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have deſcended ſo low as dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 25.
FARE. n. ſ. [from the verb.]
1. Price of paſſage in a vehicle by land or by water. Uſed only of that which is paid for the perſon, not the goods.
He found a ſhip going to Tarſiſh; ſo he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarſiſh. Jon.
He paſſage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to diſcharge his fare. Dryd. Juu.
2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.
But come, ſo well reſreſh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after ſuch delicious fare. Milton's Paraſiſe Loſt.
But when the weſtern winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender graſs and budding flow'r,
Then, at the laſt, produce in open air
Both flocks, and ſend them to their Summer's fare. Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well ſuffice;
He that would more is covetous, not wiſe:
But ſince among mankind ſo few there are,
Who will conform to philoſophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy eaſe,
And mingle ſomething of our times to pleaſe. Dryd. Juu.
Upon his riſing up he ordered the peaſant to ſet before him whatever food he had in his houſe: the peaſant brought out a great deal of coarſe fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addiſon's Guardian, N^o. 99.
FAREWELL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb fare well, or fare you well; ſis felix, abi in bonam rem; or bene ſit tibi; but in time uſe familiarized it to an adverb, and it is uſed both by thoſe who go and thoſe who are left.]
1. The parting compliment; adieu.
But farewell, king; ſith thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and baniſhment is here. Shak. K. Lear.

FAR

Farewell, maſter Silence: I will not uſe many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both. Shakeſp. Henry IV.
Whether we ſhall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlaſting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Caſſius. Shak. Jul. Caſar.
Be not amazed, call all your ſenſes to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakeſp.
An iron ſlumber ſhuts my ſwimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in ſhades of night,
For ever I am raviſh'd from thy ſight. Dryden's Virg. Geo.
Farewell, ſays he; the parting ſound ſcarce fell
From his faint lips, but ſhe replied farewell. Dryden.
O queen, farewell! be ſtill poſſeſt
Of dear remembrance, bleſſing ſtill and bleſt! Pope's Odeſſ.
2. It is ſometimes uſed only as an expreſſion of ſeparation without kindneſs.
Farewell the year which threaten'd fo
The faireſt light the world can ſhow. Waller.
Treading the path to nobler ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;
Reſolv'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me ſhould have. Waller.
FAREWELL. n. ſ.
1. Leave; act of departure.
See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious ſun. Shakeſp. Hen. VI.
If chance the radiant ſun, with farewell ſweet,
Extends his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds Atteſt their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milt. Par. Loſt.
As in this grove I took my laſt farewell,
As on this very ſpot of earth I fell. Dryden.
Before I take my farewell of this ſubject, I ſhall adviſe the author for the future to ſpeak his meaning more plainly. Addiſ.
2. It is ſometimes uſed as an adjective; leave-taking.
Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over ſo, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spectator, N^o. 445.
FARINACEOUS. adj. [from farina, Latin.] Mealy; taſting like meal or flower of corn.
The properſt food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind, is taken from the farinaceous or mealy ſeeds of ſome culmi-ferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet. Arbutnot on Aliments.
FARM. n. ſ. [ferme, French; peopm, proviſion, Saxon.]
1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.
Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farms to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward.
2. The ſtate of lands let out to the culture of tenants.
The lords of land in Ireland do not uſe to ſet out their land in farms, for term of years, to their tenants; but only from year to year, and ſome during pleaſure. Spencer on Ireland.
To FARM. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.
We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof ſhall furniſh us
For our affairs in hand. Shakeſp. Richard II.
2. To take at a certain rate.
They received of the bankers ſcant twenty ſhillings for thirty, which the earl of Cornwall farm'd of the king. Camden's Rem.
3. To cultivate land.
FARMER. n. ſ. [fermier, French; or from farm.]
1. One who cultivates hired ground.
Thou haſt ſeen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar, and the creature run from the cur: there thou might'ſt behold the great image of authority; a dog's obey'd in office. Shakeſp.
2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.
Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the flocking of his land with cattle that are larger than it will bear.
Motimer's Huſbandry.
FARMOST. n. ſ. [ſuperlative of far.] Moſt diſtant; re-moſt.
A ſpacious cave, within its farmoſt part,
Was hew'd and faſhion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow ſides. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
FARNES. n. ſ. [from far.] Diſtance; remoteneſs.
Their nearneſs on all quarters to the enemy, and their far-neſs from timely ſuccour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the utmoſt number of able hands to fight. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
FARRAGINOUS. adj. [from farrago, Latin.] Formed of different materials.
Being a confuſion of knaves and fools, and a farrag-inous concurrence of all conditions, tempers, ſexes and ages, it is but natural if their determinations be monſtrous, and many ways inconſiſtent with truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
FARRAGO. n. ſ. [Latin.] A maſs form'd confuſedly of ſeveral ingredients; a medley.

FARRIER.

FAR

FARRIER. n. ſ. [farrier, French; ſerrarius, Latin.]

But the utmoſt exactneſs in theſe particulars belong to farriers, ſaddlers, ſmiths, and other tradesmen. Digby.
2. One who profeſſes the medicine of horſes.
If you are a piece of a farrier, as every good groom ought to be, get ſack, brandy, or ſtrong-beer to rub your horſes.
Swift's Directions to the Groom.
To FARRIER. v. n. [from the noun.] To praſtice phyſick or ſurgery on horſes.
Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cowlceſhing, yet many of them are very ignorant. Mort.
FARROW. n. ſ. [farrah, Saxon.] A little pig.
Pour in ſow's blood that hath litter'd
Her nine farrows. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
To FARROW. v. a. To bring pigs. It is uſed only of ſwine.
Sows ready to farrow this time of the year, Tuſſ. Huſb.
Are ſo to be made of.
The ſwine, although multiparous, yet being biſulcous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open eyes, as other biſulcous animals. Brown.
Ev'n her, who did her numerous offſpring boaſt,
As fair and fruitful as the ſow that carry'd
The thirty pigs, at one large litter farrow'd. Dryd. Juu.
FART. n. ſ. [farre, Saxon.] Wind from behind.
Love is the fart
Of every heart;
It pains a man when 'tis kept cloſe;
And others doth offend, when 'tis let looſe. Suckling.
To FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.
As when we a gun diſcharge,
Although the bore be ne'er ſo large,
Before the flame from muzzle burſt,
Juſt at the breech it flaſhes firſt;
So from my lord his paſſion broke,
He fart'd firſt, and then he ſpoke. Swift.
FARTHER. adv. [This word is now generally conſidered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analoget can far make farther or fartheſt: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write farther and fartheſt, from forth, forther, fortheſt, forþoþ, forþeſt, Saxon; the o and u, by reſemblance of ſound, being firſt confounded in ſpeech, and afterwards in books.]
At a greater diſtance; to a greater diſtance; more remotely;
beyond; moreover.
To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, beſides rules, there is farther required a long conſervation with the beſt pieces. Dryden's Duſſonay.
They contented themſelves with the opinions, faſhions and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.
FARTHER. adj. [ſuppoſed from far, more, probably from forth.]
1. More remote.
Let me add a farther truth, that without thoſe ties of gratitude, I have a moſt particular inclination to honour you.
Dryden's Juu. Dedication.
2. Longer; tending to greater diſtance.
Before our farther way the fates allow,
Here muſt we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden's Æn.
FARTHERANCE. n. ſ. [more properly furtherance, from further.] Encouragement; promotion.
That was the foundation of the learning I have, and of all the fartherance that I have obtained. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.
FARTHERMORE. adv. [more properly furthermore.] Beſides;
over and above; likewise.
Farthermore the leaves, body and boughs of this tree, by ſo much exceed all other plants, as the greateſt men of power and worldly ability purſueth the meanest. Raleigh's Hiſtory.
To FARTHER. v. a. [more proper To farther.] To promote;
to facilitate; to advance.
If he had farthered or hindered the taking of the town,
Dryden's Dedication, to the Æn.
FARTHEST. adv. [more properly fartheſt. See FARTHER.]
1. At the greateſt diſtance.
2. To the greateſt diſtance.
FARTHEST. adj. Moſt diſtant; remotest.
Yet it muſt be withal conſidered, that the greateſt part of the world are they which be fartheſt from perfection. Hooker.
FARTHING. n. ſ. [farþing, Saxon, from forþer, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]
1. The fourth of a penny; the ſmalleſt Engliſh coin.
A farthing is the leaſt denomination or fraction of money uſed in England. Cocker's Arithmetick.
Ere all thoſe things we toil ſo hard in,
Would not avail one ſingle farthing. Prior.
2. Copper money.
The pariſh find, 'tis true; but our church-wardens Feed on the ſilver, and give us the farthings. Gay.
You are not obliged to take money not of gold or ſilver;
not the halfpence or farthings of England. Swift.
3. It is uſed ſometimes in a ſenſe hyperbolical; as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

FAS

His ſon builds on, and never is content,
'Till the laſt farthing is in ſtructure ſpent. Dryden's Juu.
FARTHINGALE. n. ſ. [This word has much exerciſed the etymology of Skinner, who at laſt ſeems to determine that it is derived from vertu garde: if he had conſidered what vert ſignifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true ſenſe.] A hoop; circles of whalebone uſed to ſpread the petticoat to a wide circumference.
With ſilken coats, and caps, and golden rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things. Shakeſp.
Tell me,
What compaſs will you wear your farthingale? Shakeſp.
Arthur wore in hall
Round table, like a farthingale. Hudibras, p. i. cont. 1.
Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and obſerve, that the farthingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spaniſh monarchy. Addiſon.
She ſeems a medley of all ages,

1. Dregs; lees; sediment; subsidence.
Hence the surface of the ground with mud
And slime belmeard, the feces of the flood,
Receiv'd the rays of heav'n; and sucking in
The seeds of heat, new creatures did begin. Dryden.

F E E

2. Excrement.
The symptoms of such a constitution are a four smell in their feces. Arbutnot on Aliments.
FE'CULENCY. n. f. [feculentia, Latin.]
FE'CULENCY. n. f. [feculentia, Latin.]
1. Muddiness; quality of abounding with lees or sediment.
2. Lees; feces; sediment; dregs.
Pour upon it some very strong lee, to facilitate the separation of its feculencies. Boyle.
Whether the wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist
Its feculence, which in more porous stocks
Of cyder plants finds passage free. Phillips.
FE'CULENT. adj. [feculentus, Lat. feculent, French.] Foul;
dreggy; excrementitious.
But both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly,
Yet nothing cleaner were for such intent. Fairy Queen.
We may affirm them to be to the body as the light of a candle to the gross and feculent snuff, which as it is not pent up in it, so neither doth it partake of its stench and impurity. Glauv. Apology.
FECUND. adj. [fecundus, Latin; second, Fr.] Fruitful; prolific.
The more sickly the years are, the less fecund or fruitful of children also they be. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
FECUNDATION. n. f. [fecundo, Latin.] The act of making fruitful or prolific.
She requested these plants as a medicine of fecundation, or to make her fruitful. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 7.
TO FECUNDIFY. v. a. To make fruitful; to make prolific. Diët.
FECUNDITY. n. f. [from fecund; fecundité, French.]
1. Fruitfulness; quality of producing or bringing forth in great abundance.
I appeal to the animal and vegetable productions of the earth, the vast numbers whereof notoriously testify the extreme luxuriance and fecundity of it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
2. Power of producing or bringing forth.
Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fecundity forty years; and I have found, from a friend, that melon-seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons.
Ray on the Creation.
He could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fecundity of his creative power never growing barren, nor being exhausted. Bentley's Sermons.
FED. Preterite and participle pass. of To feed.
For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
And breath'd the freshness of the early day,
Devouring dogs the helpless infant tore,
Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore. Pope.
FE'DARY. n. f. [fædus, Latin, or from feudum.] This word, peculiar to Shakspere, may signify either a confederate; a partner; or a dependant.
Damn'd paper!
Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless bauble!
Art thou a fedary for this act, and lookest
So virgin-like without? Shakspere's Cymbeline.
FEDERAL. adj. [from fædus, Latin.] Relating to a league or contract.
It is a federal rite betwixt God and us, as eating and drinking, both among the Jews and Heathens, was wont to be.
Hammond's Fundamentals.
The Romans compelled them, contrary to all federal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute. Greuv.
FE'DERARY. n. f. [from feudus, Latin.] A confederate; an accomplice.
She's a traitor, and Camillo is A fedary with her. Shakspere.
FE'DERATE. adj. [fæderatus, Latin.] Leagued; joined in confederacy.
FEE. n. f. [feoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]
1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledge of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgment of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum: for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be

F E E

- be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own.
Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail:
fee-simple is that whereof we are seized in those general words,
To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seized to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body, &c. And fee-tail is either general or special:
general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special is that where a man and his wife are seized of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Covel.
Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or fell fee-simples in his master's name. Hubberd's Tale.
Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakspere's Henry VI.
2. Property; peculiar.
What concern they?
The general cause; or is it a fee-grief, Shakspere's Macbeth.
Due to some single breaff?
3. Reward; gratification; recompense.
These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee. Hubberd's Tale.
Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me? Shakspere.
4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.
Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shak. Hen. VI.
5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.
He does not reject the person's pretensions, who does not know how to explain them; or refuse doing a good office for a man, because he cannot pay the fee of it. Addison's Spectat.
6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.
In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tull's Husbandry.
FE'FARM. n. f. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held from a superior lord.
John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in feefarm; which brought him into such hated, as all his lifetime after he was possess'd with fear. Davies.
TO FEE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To reward; to pay.
No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor errs
if he walks by it. South's Sermons.
Watch the disease in time; for when within
The dropsy rages and extends the skin,
In vain for hellebore the patient cries,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wife. Dryden's Persf.
2. To bribe.
I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
3. To keep in hire.
There's not a thane of them but in his house
I have a servant fee'd. Shakspere's Macbeth.
FEEBLE. adj. [foible, French.] Weak; debilitated; sickly;
infirm; without strength of body or mind.
The men carried all the feeble upon asses to Jericho. 2 Chron.
Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,
But feeble are the succours I can send. Dryden's Æn.
How I have lov'd, excuse my faltering tongue;
My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong. Dryden.
We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feeble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley's Sermons.
A crutch that helps the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.
TO FEEBLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To weaken; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not in use.
Or as a cattle reared high and round,
By subtle engines and malicious flight
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feebled quite. Fairy Queen.
Shall that victorious hand be feebled here?
That in your chambers gave you chastisement? Sh. K. John.
FEEBLEMINDED. adj. [feeble and mind.] Weak of mind;
defective in resolution and constancy.
Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thess. v. 14.
FEEBLENESS. n. f. [from feeble.] Weakness; imbecility; infirmity; want of strength.
A better head Rome's glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness. Shak. Tit And.
Some in their latter years, through the feebleness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees. South.
FEEBLY. adv. [from feeble.] Weakly; without strength.

F E E

- Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep;
Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep. Dryden.
To FEED. v. a. [fædan, Gothick; pegan, pœgan, Saxon.]
1. To supply with food.
Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,
And fed the hounds that help'd him to pursue. Dryden.
Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight. Arbutnot on Diet.
2. To supply; to furnish.
A constant smoke arises from the warm springs that feed the many baths with which this island is stocked. Addison.
The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of a barleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them too fast. Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. To graze; to consume by cattle.
Once in three years feed your mowing lands, if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them in heart. Mortimer.
The frost will spoil the grafs; for which reason take care to feed it close before Winter. Mortimer's Husbandry.
4. To nourish; to cherish.
How oft from pomp and state did I remove,
To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love? Prior.
5. To keep in hope or expectation.
Barbarossa learned the strength of the emperor, craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
6. To delight; to entertain; to keep from satiety.
The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.
TO FEED. v. n.
1. To take food. Chiefly applied to animals food.
To feed were best at home;
From thence the sawce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shakspere's Macbeth.
2. To prey; to live by eating.
I am not covetous of gold;
Nor care I, who doth feed upon my cost. Shaksp. Hen. V.
You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by milk of a cow, that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.
Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable. Brown.
He feeds on fruits, which, of their own accord,
The willing grounds and laden trees afford. Dryden's Virg.
The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice, milk, or herbs. Temple.
All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury. Pope's Essay on Man.
3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.
If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Ex. xxii. 5.
4. To grow fat or plump.
FEED. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Food; that which is eaten.
A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shivering kind of tremor through all her principal parts. Sidney, b. ii.
An old worked ox eats as well as a young one: their feed is much cheaper, because they eat no oats. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Pasture.
Besides his cote, his flocks and bounds of feed
Are now on sale. Shakspere's As you like it.
FE'EDER. n. f. [from feed.]

The beast obeys his keeper, and looks up,
Not to his master's but his feeder's hand. Denham.
2. An exciter; an encourager.
When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots. Shaksp. Henry IV.
3. One that eats.
With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder. Shaksp.
We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the miffel-thrush, or feeder upon miffeltoe. Brown's Vulgar Err.
4. One that eats nicely; one that lives luxuriously.
But that our feasts
In every mess have folly, and the feeders
Jest with it as a custom, I should blush
To see you so attired. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.
But such fine feeders are no guests for me;
Riot agrees not with frugality:
Then, that unfashionable man am I,
With me they'd starve for want of ivory. Dryden's Juven.
TO FEEL. pret. felt; part pass. felt. v. n. [felan, Saxon.]
1. To have perception of things by the touch.
The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 411.
2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.
3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.
Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.
4. To

FEE

4. To appear to the touch.
The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel: one feels flaccid and rumpled; the other more even, flatulent and springy. Sharp's Surgery.
- TO FEEL. v. a.
1. To perceive by the touch.
Suffer me that I may feel the pillars. Judg. xxvi. 26.
2. To try; to sound.
He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour. Shak.
3. To have sense of pain or pleasure.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel? Milton.
But why should those be thought to 'scape, who feel
Those rods of scorpions and those whips of steel? Creed's Juvenal.
The well sung woes shall sooth my pensive ghost;
He best can paint them who can feel them most. Pope.
Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
E'er felt such grief, such terror, and despair. Pope.
4. To be affected by.
Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it. Shak. Hen. VIII.
5. To know; to be acquainted with.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shak. Hen. VIII.
FEEL. n. f. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling; the touch.
The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel: one feels flaccid and rumpled, the other more even, flatulent, and springy. Sharp's Surgery.
FEELER. n. f. [from feel.]
1. One that feels.
This hand, whose touch,
Whose ev'ry touch would force the feeler's soul
To th' oath of loyalty. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
2. The horns or antennæ of insects.
Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Derham's Physico-Theology.
FEELING. participial adj. [from feel.]
1. Expressive of great sensibility.
O wretched state of man in self-division!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision. Sidney.
Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney, b. ii.
Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Sh. Two Gent. of Verona.
2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.
A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Of all your royal favours; but this last Strikes through my heart. Southerne.
FEELINGLY. adv. [from feel.]
1. The sense of touch.
Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through ev'ry pore. Milton.
2. Sensibility; tenderness.
The apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse. Shak. Rich. II.
Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon's Henry VII.
3. Perception.
Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it. Bacon's Essays.
As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.
FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]
1. With expression of great sensibility.
The prince's might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.
2. So as to be sensibly felt.
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shak. As you like it.

FEL

- He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh's History of the World.
FEET. n. f. The plural of foot.
His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears. Pope's Statius.
FEETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Without feet.
Geoffrey of Bouillon broched three feetless birds, called Al-lerions, upon his arrow. Camden.
TO FEIGN. v. a. [feindre, French; fingere, Latin.]
1. To invent.
And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poetry and the poet. Ben. Johnson's Discover.
No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart. Neh. vi. 8.
2. To make a show of.
Both his hands, most filthy seculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And feigned to wash themselves incessantly. Spens. Fairy Qu.
3. To make a shew of; to do upon some false pretence.
Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around. Pope.
4. To dissemble; to conceal. Now obsolete.
Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.
TO FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention.
Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature. Shak. Agon.
FEIGNEDLY. adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.
Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathens. Bacon, Essay 28.
FEIGNER. n. f. [from feign.] Inventor; contriver of a fiction.
And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poetry and the poet. Ben. Johnson.
FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned, or feint, Fr.]
The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.
FEINT. n. f. [feint, French.]
1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.
Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off. Spektator, No. 286.

FEINTFARE. n. f. See FIELDFARE.
TO FELICITATE. v. a. [felicitare, French; felicitare, Latin.]
1. To make happy.
I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys;
And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness's love. Shakespeare's King Lear.
What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey. Watts.
2. To congratulate.
They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or deprecating the evil to follow. Brown's Vulgar Err.
FELICITATION. n. f. [French, from felicitate.] Congratulation. DiD.
FELICITOUS. adj. [felix, Latin.] Happy. DiD.
FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitous.] Happily. DiD.
FELICITY. n. f. [felicitas, Latin; felicitas, Fr.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.
The joyous days, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didst die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser, Sonnet 68.
Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease. Milt. Par. Reg.
So the felicity of her wonderful reign may be complete. Aberbury's Sermons.
How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel! Rogers, Sermon vii.
FELINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.
Even as in the heaven; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper. Gray's Miscellany.
FELL. adj. [felle, Saxon.]
1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

FEL

- It seem'd fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax, b. ii.
So fellst foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shak.
That infant like I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.
I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tigers on the Lybian plain. Pope's Autumn.
Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson's Spring.
FELL. n. f. [felle, Saxon.] The skin; the hide.
Wipe thine eye;
The gougiers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-briek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shak. Macbeth.
TO FELL. v. a. [fellen, German.]
1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.
Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shak. Henry V.
Up and down he travels his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.
Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and felled him. Raleigh.
His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Hovel's Vocal Forest.
On their whole host I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled. Milt. Agon.
Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down,
And clef the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.
I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining scale. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
2. To hew down; to cut down.
Then would he seem a farmer that would fell Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell. Hubb. Tale.
Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their fauchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden.
FELL. The preterite of To fall.
None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.
FELLER. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.
Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Is. xiv. 3.
FELLIFLOUS. adj. [fel and fluo, Latin.] Flowing with gall. DiD.

FELLSNESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.
When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very felicity loud he gan to weep. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
FELLOE. n. f. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written felly or felly.
Out, out, thou strumpet fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shak. Sp.
Their axle-trees, naves, fellies, and spokes were all molten. Kings vii. 33.
FELLOW. n. f. [quasi, to follow, Minshew; from fe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon; Junius; fellow, Scottish.]
1. A companion; one with whom we consort.
In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end. Ajcham's Schoolmaster.
To be your fellow,
You may deny me; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.
2. An associate; one united in the same affair.
Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabric mounts the walls. Dryden's Virg.
3. One of the same kind.
Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.
A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of any of his fellows. L'Estrange's Fables.

FEL

4. Equal; peer.
Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax, b. ii.
So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants. Sidney.
5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.
When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice: the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows. Addison's Spectator, No. 86.
6. One like another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.
7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; some times with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.
This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shak. Othello.
An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon, Apophthegm 4.
Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.
8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.
Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleas'd the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney, b. ii.
Castro hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodorigo, and fellows that are 'cap'd;
He's almost slain, and Rodorigo dead. Shak. Othello.
I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows.
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputation's banishment;
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. Shak. Henry IV.
How oft the fight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had'st not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shak. K. John.
The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow. Shak. Othello.
The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.
As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingratiate a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed. Dryden.
You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal. Swift.
You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobler like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope's Essay on Man.
9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.
The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.
10. A member of a college that shares its revenues.
TO FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match.
Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.
Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
FELLOW-COMMONER. n. f.
1. One who has the same right of common.
He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellowcommoners, all mankind. Locke.
2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.
FELLOW-CREATURE. n. f. One that has the same creator.
Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellowcreatures the brutes in this lower world. Watts's Logick, Introduction.
FELLOW-HEIR. n. f. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.
The Gentiles should be felowheirs. Eph. iii. 6.
FELLOW-HELPER. n. f. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.
We ought to receive such, that we might be fellowhelpers to the truth. 3 Jo. viii.
FELLOW-LABOURER. n. f. One who labours in the same design.
My fellowlabourers have likewise commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication. Dryd. Juv. Ded.
FELLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same master. Not

FEL

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milt. Parad. Lost.
Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my flighted care
Than the bright dame's we serve. Waller.
Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury's Sermons.
FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.
Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation. Shakesp.
Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Phil. ii. 25.
FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another.
I pr'ythee, do not mock me, fellow-student;
I think it was to see my mother's wedding. Shakesp. Hamlet.
If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts's Logick.
FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives under the same government.
The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.
FELLOW-SUPPER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils;
one who partakes the same sufferings with another.
How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve the wants of others?
Dryden's Fables, Dedication.
We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison's Spectator.
FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.
Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison's Spectator.
FELLOWFEELING. n. f. [fellow and feelings.]
1. Sympathy.
It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellowfeel-
ing of the misfortune of my brother. L'Estrange.
2. Combination; joint interest.
Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fel- lowfeeling. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
FELLOWLIKE. adj. [fellow and like.] Like a companion;
FELLOWLY. adv. on equal terms; companionable.
All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
One feed for another, to make an exchange.
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tusser.
FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]
1. Companionship; comfort; society.
This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship. Shak. Coriolan.
From blissful bow'rs
Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By the waters of life, where'er they sit
In fellowships of joy, the fons of light Hasted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 80.
There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.
God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society. Locke.
2. Association; confederacy; combination.
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakesp. Henry V.
Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves what to do, or not to do. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knolles's History of the Turks.
3. Equality.
4. Partnership; joint interest.
Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load. Parad. Reg.
O love! thou sternly do'st thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.
5. Company; state of being together.
The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a fail! Shakesp. Othello.
6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.
In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.

FEM

7. Fitness and fondness for feistal entertainments, with good prefixed.
He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon, b. viii.
8. An establishment in the college with share in its revenue.
Corusodes having, by the most extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went up to London. Swift.
9. [In arithmetic.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocher's Arithmetic.
10. A rule in arithmetic, by which two or more independent operations of the rule of three may divide any given number into unequal parts, proportional to certain other numbers.
It is so called, because the more common and useful application thereof is in the division of gains, losses, or other things, among partners in company. Malcolm.
FELLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.
Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tiger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast, doth felly him oppress. Spenser's Sonnets.
FELON-DE-SE. n. f. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself.
FELON. n. f. [felon, French; felus, low Latin; fel, Saxon.]
1. One who has committed a capital crime.
I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
And often have you brought the wily fox,
Chas'd even amid the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murderous deed. Dryden.
2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.
The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wifeman's Surgery.
FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.
Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirr'd up so mischievous despite! Spenser.
Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope's Odyssey.
FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villa-nous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.
This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Watson.
O thiefish night!
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.
In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen and dies. Dryden.
FELONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.
FELONOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; felonious.
I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonous force of mine enemy. Spenser's Pastoral.
FELONY. n. f. [felonie, Fr. felonia, low Latin, from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.
I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakesp. Henry VI.
FELT. The preterite of FEEL, which see.
FELT. n. f. [pelt, Saxon.]
1. Cloth made of wool united without weaving.
It were a delicate stratagem to those
A troop of horse with felt. Shakespeare's King Lear.
2. A hide or skin.
To know whether sheep are found or not, see that the felt be loose. Mortimer's Husbandry.
TO FELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.
The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
TO FELTRE. v. a. [from felt.] To clot together like felt.
His feltred locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briers and thorns resemble. Fairfax.
FELUCCA. n. f. [felu, Fr. felon, Arab.] A small open boat with six oars. Dia.
FEMALE. n. f. [from femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she;
one of the sex which brings young.
God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i. 27.
Man, more divine,
Lord of the wide world, and wide wat'ry seas,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are matters to their females, and their lords. Shakespeare.
FEMALE. adj.
1. Not masculine; belonging to a she.
If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryd.
2. FEMALE

FEN

2. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:
Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Crowley.
The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden's Preface to Ann. Mirab.
FEME COVERT. n. f. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.
FEME Sola. n. f. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.
FEMINAILITY. n. f. [from femina, Latin.] Female nature.
If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of femininity take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.
FEMININE. adj. [femininus, Latin.]
1. Of the sex that brings young; female.
Thus we chastise the god of wine
With water that is feminine,
Until the cooler nymph abate
His wrath, and so congregate. Cleaveland.
2. Soft; tender; delicate.
Her heav'nly form
Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton's Parad. Lost.
3. Effeminate; emasculated.
Ninias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine and subjected to ease and delicacy. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
FEMININE. n. f. A she; one of the sex that brings young;
a female.
O! why did God create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? And not fill the world at once
With men, as angels, without feminine? Milt. Par. Lost.
FEMORAL. adj. [femoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.
The large crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. Sharp's Surgery.
FEN. n. f. [penn, Saxon; venne, Dutch.] A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.
Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbot's Description of the World.
I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shakesp. Coriolan.
Yon common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
As reek o' th' rotten fen. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward on Fossils.
He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,
And with a clear unfully'd current glides. Addison.
FENBERRY. n. f. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.
FENCER. n. f. [from defence.]
1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.
That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piety.
There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange, Fable 167.
To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.
Let us bear this awful corps to Cæsar,
And lay it in his sight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison's Cato.
2. Inclosure; mound; hedge.
In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden's Horace.
Shall I mention make
Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,
Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.
Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.
3. The art of fencing; defence.
I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
4. Skill in defence.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakespeare.
TO FENCE. v. a.
1. To inclose; to secure by an inclosure or hedge.
Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;
In fenced towers bestow'd is their grain,
Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade. Fairfax, b. ii.
He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and set darkness in my paths. Job xix. 8.

FEN

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job x. 11.
He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac. xii. 13.
See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail, of other inclosure. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. To guard.
So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy forceries. Milton's Agonistes.
With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent. Dryden.
TO FENCE. v. n.
1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.
He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.
2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.
Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.
3. To fight according to art.
If a throttle ring, he falls strait a capering;
He will fence with his own shadow. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;
The flooping warriors, aiming head to head,
Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,
Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.
A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters company. Locke.
These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelling. Arbut. and Pope's Ma. Sc.
FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.
Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive:
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from North, from South, from East, from West. Rowe's Jane Shore.
FENCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.
Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.
A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.
FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.
FENCINGMASTER. n. f. [fence and master.] One who teaches the use of weapons.
FENCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.
If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencingschool, and every day exercising. Locke.
TO FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.
Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath, to fend the bitter cold. Dryden's Virgil.
TO FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.
The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning;
but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.
FENDER. n. f. [from fend.]
1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.
2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.
FENERATION. n. f. [feneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.
The hare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfétation. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.
FENUGREEK. n. f. [fenum Græcum, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, somewhat plain, shaped like a horn, and full of seeds, for the most part rhomboid or kidney-shaped. Miller.
FENNEL. n. f. [feniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.
It is an umbelliferous plant, whose leaves are divided into capillaceous jags: the petals of the flower are intire, and placed orbicularly, expanding in form of a rose; each flower is succeeded by two oblong thick gibbous seeds, chauced on one side, and plain on the other. Miller.
A fav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milton.
FENNELFLOWER. n. f. A plant.
FENNELGIANT. n. f. A plant.
9 B

FER

It hath a large succulent milky root: the stalks are spongy, and filled with pith: the flowers consist of many leaves, expanded in form of a rose, growing in an umbel: each flower is succeeded by two large oval-shaped flat seeds, which are very thin, and turn black when ripe: the leaves are like those of fennel. Miller.

FENNY. adj. [from fen.] 1. Marshy; boggy; moorish. Driving in of piles is used for stone or brick houses, and that only where the ground proves fenny or moorish. Moxon. The hungry crocodile, and hissing snake, Lurk in the trouble'd stream and fenny brake. Prior. 2. Inhabiting the marsh. Fillet of a fenny snake. Shakespeare's Macbeth. In the caudron boil and bake. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FENNYSTONES. n. f. A plant.

FENSUCKED. adj. [from fen and suck.] Sucked out of marshes. Infect her beauty.

You fenfucked fogs, drawn by the pow'rful fun. Sh. K. Lear.

FEO. n. f. [from feodum, low Latin.] Fee; tenure.

FEODAL. adj. [from feodum, French, from feod.] Held from another.

FEOBARY. n. f. [from feodum, Latin.] One who holds his estate under the tenure of suit and service to a superior lord. Hammer.

TO FEOFF. v. a. [from fief, fiefser, French; feoffare, low Latin.] To put in possession; to invest with right.

FEOFFEE. n. f. [from feoffatus, Latin; fiefste, French.] One put in possession.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to feoffee in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the estate of his lands. Spenser's State of Ireland.

FEOFFER. n. f. [from feoffator, low Latin.] One who gives possession of any thing. See FEOFFMENT.

FEOFFMENT. n. f. [from feoffamentum, Latin.] The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immoveable things, to another in fee-simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of feign of the thing given: when it is in writing, it is called a deed of feoffment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffor and a donor is, that the feoffor gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail. Cowel.

The act of parliament cut off and frustrated all such conveyances as had, by the space of twelve years before his rebellion, been made; within the compass whereof the fraudulent feoffment of others, his accomplices and fellow-traitors, were contained. Spenser's State of Ireland.

FERACITY. n. f. [from feracitas, Lat.] Fruitfulness; fertility. Diët.

FERAL. adj. [from feralis, Latin.] Funereal; mournful; deadly. Diët.

FERIATION. n. f. [from feriatio, Lat.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

As though there were any feriation in nature, this season is commonly termed the physicians vacation. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FERINE. adj. [from ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty that remains is touching those ferine, noxious, and untameable beasts; as lions, tigers, wolves and bears. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FERINENESS. n. f. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

FERITY. n. f. [from feritas, Latin.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness.

He reduced him from the most abject and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason. Woodward's Natural History.

TO FERMENT. v. a. [from fermento, Latin; fermenter, French.] To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye vigorous twains! while youth ferments your blood, And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood, Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset, Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

TO FERMENT. v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

FERMENT. n. f. [from ferment, French; fermentum, Latin.] 1. That which causes intestine motion. The women puts females into a fever, upon impregnation; and all animal humours which poison, are putrefying ferments. Floyer on the Humours. Subdue and cool the ferment of desire. Rogers's Sermons. 2. The intestine motion; tumult.

FERMENTABLE. adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.

FERMENTAL. adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation. Cucumbers, being waterish, fill the veins with crude and windy ferocities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fermental faculty of the stomach. Br. un.

FERMENTATION. n. f. [from fermentatio, Latin.] A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles: as when heaven or yest rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort, &c. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together. Harris.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens. Boyle.

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before. Collier of Friendship.

The sap, in fluent dance, And lively fermentations, mountings, spreads All this innumerable colour'd scene of things. Thomson.

FERMENTATIVE. adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation. Aromatic spirits destroy by their fermentative heat. Arbuth.

FERN. n. f. [from ferreum, Saxon.] A plant. The male fern is common on the stumps of trees in woods, and on the banks of ditches: the leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, dentated on the edges, and set close by one another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. Decoctions of the root and diet-drinks have been used in chronic disorders and obstructions. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy for the rickets in children. Hill.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood, Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn; Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden's Æneid.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens. Miller.

FERNY. adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern. The herd fenned, did late repair To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lare. Dryden.

FERVIDNESS. n. f. [from fervid.] Ardour of mind; zeal; passion. As to the healing of Malchus's ear, in the act of the meek lamb of God, it was a kind of injury done to him by the fervidness of St. Peter, who knew not yet what spirit he was of. Bentley's Sermons.

FERULA. n. f. [from ferula, Fr. from ferula, giant fennel, Lat.] An instrument of correction with which young scholars are beaten on the hand: so named because anciently the stalks of fennel were used for this purpose. These differ as much as the rod and ferula. Shaw's Grammar.

TO FERULE. v. a. To chastise with the ferula.

FERVOUR. n. f. [from fervor, Latin; ferveur, French.] 1. Heat; warmth. Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual ferveur proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown's Vulg. Errours, b. iv. Like bright Aurora, whose refulgent ray Foretells the ferveur of ensuing day, And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat To leafy shadows, from the threatned heat. Waller. These silver drops, like morning dew, Foretell the ferveur of the day; So from one cloud soft flow'r is we view, And blasting lightnings burst away. Pope. 2. Heat of mind; zeal; ardour of devotion. Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in ferveur of zeal they had removed such things. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14. Haply despair hath seiz'd her; Or, wing'd with ferveur of her love, she's flown To her desired Polthumus. Shakespeare's Cymbeline. There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues in its present ferveur. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

FESCUE. n. f. [from fescue, Dutch; festus, French.] A small wire by which those who teach to read point out the letters. Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the forefinger of the right hand, or by any kind of fescue. Holder. Teach them how manly passions ought to move; For such as cannot think, can never love; And since they needs will judge the poet's art, Point 'em with fescues to each shining part. Dryden.

FESSEL. n. f. A kind of bafe grain. Didstain not fessels or poor vech to sow, Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive. May's Ving. Georg.

FESSE. n. f. [in heraldry.] The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the escutcheon over the middle: if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say to many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say barwife, or barry of six, eight, or ten, as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules barry of eight. Pea-ham on Blazoning.

TO FESTER. v. n. [from fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, Junius.] To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent. I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the sore which had deeply festered within me. Sidney, b. ii. How

FET

How should our feftered foies be cured? Hooker, b. i.
Inward corruption and infected fin,
Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained fill,
And feftering fore did rangle yet within. Fairy Queen, b. i.
I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.
—Well might they feftor gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Mind that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies Must lie and feftor. Shakespeare's Henry V.

There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be feftering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect. Wotton.

Passion, anger, and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery only that makes it feftor. South's Sermons.

FESTINATE. adj. [festinatus, Latin.] Hasty; hurried. A word not in use.

Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like. Shakesp. King Lear.
FESTINATELY. adv. [from festinate.] Hastily; speedily;
with speed. Not in use.

that he might manifest his divine charity to men. Athenbury.
FESTIVAL. n. f. Time of feast; anniversary-day of civil or religious joy.

So tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festivals,
To an impatient child that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Th' invited sisters with their graces blest
Their festivals. Sandys.

The morning trumpets festival proclaim'd
Through each high street. Milton's Agonistes.

Follow, ye nymphs and shepherds all,
Come celebrate this festival,
And merrily sing, and sport, and play;
For 'tis Oriana's nuptial day. Granville.

By sacrifice of the tongues they purged away whatever they had spoken amiss during the festival. Notes on the Odyssey.

The festival of our Lord's resurrection we have celebrated, and may now consider the chief consequence of his resurrection,
a judgment to come. Athenbury's Sermons.

FESTIVE. adj. [festivus, Latin.] Joyous; gay; befitting a feast.

The glad circle round them yield their souls
To festive mirth and wit that knows no gall. Thomson.

FESTIVITY. n. f. [festivitas, Latin, from festive.]
1. Festival; time of rejoicing.

The daughter of Jephtha came to be worshipped as a deity, and had an annual festivity observed unto her honour. Brown.

There happening a great and solemn festivity, such as the sheep-shearings used to be, David condescends to beg of a rich man some small repast. South.

2. Gaiety; joyfulness; temper or behaviour befitting a feast.

To those persons there is no better instrument to cause the remembrance, and to endear the affection to the article, than the recommending it by festivity and joy of a holyday. Taylor.

FESTOON. n. f. [festoon, French.] In architecture, an ornament of carved work in the form of a wreath or garland of flowers, or leaves twisted together, thickest at the middle, fection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries. Addison on Italy.

5. To draw within any confinement or prohibition.

General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance. Sanderfon.

6. To produce by some kind of force.

These ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fetch it out, and give it fair opportunities to advance itself by. Milton on Education.

An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its beauties 'till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours. Addison's Spectator.

7. To perform any excursion.

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king Hath charg'd you should not speak together. Shak. Cymbel.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round
Over the mount, and all this hollow ground. Milton.

To come to that place they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest. Knolles's History.

8. To perform with suddenness or violence.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetch mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shakesp.

The fox fetcht a hundred and a hundred leaps at a delicious cluster of grapes. L'Estrange.

Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the small-pox, she fetches a deep sigh. Addison.

9. To reach; to arrive at; to come to.

Mean time flew our ships, and freight we fetcht
The syrens' tale; a speckless wind so stretcht
Her wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel. Chapman.

It needs not thy belief,
If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day
Travelling East; and with her part averse
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

The hare laid himself down, and took a nap; for, says he,
I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange.

10. To obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as the silver in bullion. Locke.

Like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about. Shakespeare.

FETCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find,
His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind;
His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee than. Tuff. Husband.

It is a fetch of wit;
You laying these slight follies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little foild 't' working. Shak. Hamlet.

But Sidrophel, as full of tricks
As rota men of politicks,
Straight cast about to over-reach
Th' unwary conqueror with a fetch. Hudibras, p. ii.

With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Still.
The fox had a fetch in't. L'Estrange, Fab. 42.

that the fetus respire in the womb. Boyle.

FETD. n. f. [reache, enmity, Saxon.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds
In sharing of their publick goods. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. i.

In former ages it was a constant policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in the ile of Great Britain. Addison's Freeholder.

Scythia mourns
Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half uncropt by the feuds of Rome. Addison's Cato.

FEUDAL. adj. [feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superior lord.

FEUDAL. n. f. A dependance; something held by tenure;
a fee; a fief.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England. Hale.

FEUDATORY. n. f. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief,
but by some conditional tenure from a superior.

The duke of Parma was reasonably well tempted to be true to that enterprize, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope, and the protection of the king of Spain.

FEVER. n. f. [fevere, French; febris, Latin.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

FEVERET. n. f. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance. Ayliffe's Pervergon.

FEVERFEW. n. f. [febris and fuge, Latin.]

It has a fibrose root: the leaves are conjugated, and divided into many segments: the cup of the flower is squamose and hemispherical: the flowers grow in an umbel upon the top of the stalks, and the rays of the flower are generally white.
The species are nine; but the first, called common feverfew, is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England; but is, however, cultivated in medicinal gardens. Miller.

FEVERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.

When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to a fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift to Pope.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We tofs and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the feverish North retire. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

FEVERISHNESS. n. f. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

FEVEROUS. adj. [fevereux-se, French, from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. Having the nature of a fever.

All feverous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain, not. Bacon's Natural History.

FEVERY. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head
Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fev'ry. B. Johns. Catil.

FEUILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

I have done Homer's head; and I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval.

Jervas to Pope.

FEUILLEMORT. n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot.

FEUTERER. n. f. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW. adj. [preo, peopa, Saxon; few, Danish.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many. Jer.

So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;
For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryd. Juvenal.

On Winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryden's Virg. Geor.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope's Hor. Imitat.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.

FIC

- So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
 Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done? Milton.
 Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryden's En.
 The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope's Odyssey.
FICHEL. n. f. [feul, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.
 If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, mult not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewels, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions and broils? Hooker, Dedication.
 Others may give the fewel or the fire;
 But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.
 A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley's Sermons.
TO FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.
 Never, alas! the dreadful name,
 That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.
FE'WNESS. n. f. [from few.]
 1. Paucity; smallness of number.
 These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers of the rest with whom they are embodied. Dryden's Preface to the Hind and Panther.
 2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.
Fewness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakef. Meas. for Measure.
TO FEY. v. a. [veghen, Dutch.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.
 Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
 That all a dry Summer no water will yield,
 By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
 Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tuff. Husband.
FIB. n. f. [A cant word among children.] A lye; a falsehood.
 Destroy his fib or sophistry; in vain,
 The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope's Epistles.
 I so often lie,
 Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I. Pope.
TO FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lyes; to speak falsely.
 If you have any particular mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
FIBBER. n. f. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.
FIBRE. n. f. [fibres, Fr. fibra, Latin.] A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.
 Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
 And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.
 2. A fibres, in physics, is an animal thread, of which there are different kinds: some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Now of all these some are very sensible, and others destitute of all sense: some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others, on the contrary, so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them, when examined with a microscope, appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries and muscles. And again, by the various texture and different combination of some or all of these parts, the more compound organs are framed; such as the lungs, stomach, liver, legs and arms, the sum of all which make up the body. Quincy.
 My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
 And every slacken'd *fib*re drops its hold,
 Like nature letting down the springs of life:
 The name of father awes me still. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.
FIBRIL. n. f. [fibrilla, French.] A small fibre or string.
 The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
FIBROUS. adj. [fibreux, French, from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.
 The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscidous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon's Natural History.
 I saw Petrus' arms employ'd around
 A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
 This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
 The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryden.
 The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines.
FIBULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg; much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.
FICKLE. adj. [picol, Saxon.]
 1. Changeable; unconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeable; without steady adherence.

FID

- Remember where we are,
 In France amongst a fickle wavering nation. Shak. Hen. VI.
 A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
 Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shak. K. Lear.
 Or like hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.
 They know how fickle common lovers are;
 Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
 For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.
 We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
 Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.
 2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.
 He would be loth
 Us to abolish; lest the adversary
 Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
 Most favours! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
FICKLENESS. n. f. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.
 Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom the complained. Sidney.
 Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
 In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Fairy Queen.
 I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
 Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakef. Henry VI.
 Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 25.
 Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. Addison.
FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.
 Do not now,
 Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
 Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
 To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
 By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.
FICCO. n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.
 Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fig to all that his adversaries can by siege, force, or famine attempt against him. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.
 The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Nat. History.
FICTION. n. f. [fictio, Latin; fision, French.]
 1. The act of feigning or inventing.
 If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fision of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it?
Fision is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fision. Dryden's Discrepancy.
 2. The thing feigned or invented.
 If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
 By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets fictions;
 If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
 While that my soul, flies, she lives in affliction. Sidney.
 So also was the fision of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah. Raleigh.
 3. A falsehood; a lye.
FICTIOUS. adj. [fictus, Latin] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.
 With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
 Matter and motion man restrains,
 And study'd lines and fictious circles draws. Prior.
FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictivus, Latin.]
 1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.
 Draw him strictly so,
 That all who view the piece may know
 He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.
 2. Feigned; imaginary.
 The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.
 3. Not real; not true.
 Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addison's Spectator.
FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.
 These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 20.
FID. n. f. [fitta, Italian.] A pointed iron with which women untwist their cords. Skinner.
FIDDLE. n. f. [pselle, Saxon; vedel, Dutch; fidel, German; fidelula, Latin; fiddle, Erse.]
 1. A stringed instrument of music; a violin. In

FIE

- In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer.
 The adventure of the bear and fiddle
 Is sung; but breaks off in the middle. Hudibras.
 She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find whereabout the tune lay. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 98.
TO FIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To play upon a fiddle.
 Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city. Bacon's Essays.
 Others import yet nobler arts from France,
 Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance. Pope.
 2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.
 A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. Arbutn. H. of J. Bull.
 Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done. Swift.
FIDDLEFADDLE. n. f. [A cant word.] Trifles.
 She said that their grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature. Spektator, N^o. 299.
FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.
 'She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her. Arbutn. J. Bull.
FIDDLEER. n. f. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.
 Let no fawcy fiddleer presume to intrude,
 Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss. Ben. Johnson.
 Nero put the fiddleers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.
 These will appear such chits in story,
 'Twill turn all policies to jests,
 To be repeated like John Dory,
 When fiddleers sing at feasts. Dryden.
 When mis delights in her spinnet,
 A fiddleer may a fortune get. Swift.
FIDDLESTICK. n. f. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddle draws over the strings of a fiddle.
 His grizzly beard was long and thick,
 With which he strung his fiddlestick. Hudibras, p. i.
FIDDLESTRING. n. f. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.
 A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth. Arbutnot on Air.
FIDELITY. n. f. [fidelitas, Latin; fidelté, French.]
 1. Honesty; veracity.
 The church, by her public reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is a fidelté. Hooker, b. v. c. 19.
 2. Faithful adherence.
 They mistake credulity for fidelté. Clarke.
TO FIDGE. v. n. [A cant word.] To move nimbly and to fidget. Irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.
 Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble in;
 You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,
 Put all your brother puppets out;
 Run on in a perpetual round,
 To teaze, perplex, disturb, confound. Swift.
FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.
 Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obedient submission to the commands. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
FIDUCIARY. n. f. [fiduciarius, Latin.]
 1. One who holds any thing in trust.
 2. One who depends on faith without works.
 The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Hammond.
FIDUCIARY. adj.
 1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.
 That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the Gospel has revealed. Wake's Preparation for Death.
 2. Not to be doubted.
 Elaiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience. Huvel's Voc. Poest.
FIEF. n. f. [seif, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superiour.
 To the next realm the stretch'd her sway,
 For painture near adjoining lay,
 A pteous province and alluring prey;
 A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,
 And the whole seif, in right of poetry, the claim'd. Dryden.
 As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of seifs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea. Arbutnot on Coins.

FIE

- FIELD. n. f. [pelo, Saxon; feld, German; veld, Dutch.]
 1. Ground not inhabited; not built on.
 Live with me, and be my love,
 And we will all the pleasure prove,
 That hills and vallies, dale and field,
 And all the craggy mountains yield. Ralegh.
 By the civil law the corpse of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the fields. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 2. Ground not enclosed.
Field lands are not exempted from mildews, nor yet from smut, where it is more than in inclosed lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

 Since his majesty went into the field,
 I have seen her rise from her bed. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 5. The ground of battle.
 What though the field be lost,
 All is not lost. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
 When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy than secures him from it. Locke.
 6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.
 You maintain several factions;
 And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,
 You are disputing of your generals. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 7. A wide expanse.
 The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;
 Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,
 Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.
 Ask of yonder argent fields above,
 Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove. Pope's Essay on Man.
 8. Space; compass; extent.
 The ill-natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes failings in human nature. Addison's Spectator.
 I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten, if I should display all the advantages of peace. Smalridge.
 Who can this field of miracles survey,
 And not with Galen all in rapture say,
 Behold a God, adore him and obey. Blackmore's Creation.
 9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn.
 Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well united with colour. Dryden's Duress.
 10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.
FIELDED. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.
 Now, Mars, I prythee, make us quick in work;
 That we with smoking swords may march from hence,
 To help our fielded friends. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
FIELD-BASIL. n. f. [field and basil.] A plant with a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is upright, roundish, and generally split in two; but the beard, or under lip, is divided into three segments: these flowers are disposed in whorles round the stalks, and are succeeded by oblong seeds. Miller.
FIELDBED. n. f. [field and bed.] A bed contrived to be set up easily in the field.
 Romeo, good-night; I'll to my trucklebed,
 This fielded is too cold for me to sleep. Shak. Rom. and Jul.
FIELDFARE. n. f. [pelo and farra, to wander in the fields.] A bird.
 Winter birds, as woodcocks and fieldfares, if they come early out of the northern countries, with us shew cold Winters. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 816.
FIELDMARSHAL. n. f. [field and marshal.] Commander of an army in the field.
FIELDMOUSE. n. f. [field and mouse.] A mouse that burrows in banks, and makes her house with various apartments.

1. Savage; ravenous; easily enraged.
Thou hunt'st me as a ferce lion. Job.
2. Vehement in rage; eager of mischief.
Destruction enters in the treacherous wood,
And vengeful slaughter, ferce for human blood. Pope.
Tyrants ferce, that unrelenting die
With that the god, whose earthquakes rock the ground, Fierce to Phœacia crost the vast profound. Pope's Odyssey.
3. Violent; outrageous Curled be their anger, for it was ferce; and their wrath, for it was cruel. Gen. xlix. 7.
4. Passionate; angry; furious.
This ferce abridgment
Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
A man brings his mind to be positive and ferce for positions whose evidence he has never examined. Locke.
5. Strong; forcible.
The ships, though so great, are driven of ferce winds;
yet are they turned about with a very small helm. Ja. iii. 2.
FERCELY. adv. [from ferce.] Violently; furiously.
Battle join'd, and both sides *ferce*ly fought. Shak. H. VI.
The defendants, *ferce*ly assailed by their enemies before, and beaten with the great ordnance behind, were grievously distressed. Knolly's History of the Turks.
The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more *ferce*ly, as fire scorseth in frosty weather, and so furthereth the consumption. Bacon's Natural History.
FERCENESS. n. f. [from ferce.]
1. Ferocity; savageness.
The same defect of heat which gives a ferceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language.
Swift's Letter to the Lord High Treasurer.
2. Eagerness for blood; fury.
Suddenly there came out of a wood a monstrous lion, with a the-bear not far from him, of little less ferceness. Sidney.
3. Quickness to attack; keenness in anger and resentment.
The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength, Fierce to their skill, and to their ferceness valiant. Shak.
4. Violence; outrageous passion.
His pride and brutal ferceness I abhor;
But scorn your mean suspicions of me more. Dryd. Aureng.
FERIACIAS. [In law.] A judicial writ, that lies at all times within the year and day, for him that has recovered in an action of debt or damages, to the sheriff, to command him to levy the debt, or the damages of his goods, against whom the recovery was had. Cowell.
FERINESS. n. f. [from ferce.]
1. Hot qualities; heat; acrimony.
The ashes, by their heat, their feriness, and their dryness, belong to the element of earth. Boyle.
2. Heat of temper; intellectual ardour.
The Italians, notwithstanding their natural feriness of temper, affect always to appear sober and sedate. Addison.
FERY. adj. [from ferce.]
1. Conflicting of fire.
Scarcely had Phœbus in the gloomy East
Yet harnessed his ferie footed team,
Ne rear'd above the earth his flaming crest,
When the last deadly smok aloft did steam. Fairy Queen.
I know, thou'dst rather Follow thine enemy in a ferie gulph
Than flatter him in a bower. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
2. Hot like fire.
Hath thy ferie heart so parcht thy entrails,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death? Shak. H. VI.
3. Vehement; ardent; active.
Then ferie expedition be my wings,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king. Shak. Rich. III.
I drew this gallant head of war,
And cull'd these ferie spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Ev'n in the jaws of danger and of death. Shak. K. John.
4. Passionate; outrageous; easily provoked.
You know the ferie quality of the duke;
How unremovable, and fixt he is In his own course. Shakespeare's King Lear.
5. Unrestrained; fierce.
Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and ferie steed,
Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course. Shak. R. II.
Through Elis and the Grecian towns he flew;
Th' audacious wretch four ferie couriers drew. Dryden.
6. Heated by fire.
The sword which is made ferie doth not only cut, but by reason of the sharpness which imply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker, b. v. 54.

FIG

See! from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings:
Short is his joy; he feels the ferie wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground. Pope.
FIFE. n. f. [fife, French.] A pipe blown to the drum; military wind-musick.
Farewell the plumed troops, and the big war
That make ambition virtue! oh farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing fife. Shak. Othello.
Thus the gay victim, with fresh garlands crown'd,
Pleas'd with the sacred fife's enlivening sound,
Through gazing crowds in solemn state proceeds. Phillips.
FIFTEEN. adj. [fifteen, Saxon.] Five and ten.
I have dreamed and slept above some fifteen years and more. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
FIFTEENTH. adj. [fifteenth, Sax.] The ordinal of fifteen;
the fifth after the tenth.
A fifteenth part of silver incorporate with gold, will not be recovered by any water of separation, except you put a greater quantity of silver to draw up the less. Bacon's Natural History.
London sends but four burgesses to parliament, although it bear the fifteenth part of the charge of the whole nation in all publick taxes and levies. Gravitt's Bills of Mortality.
FIFTH. adj. [fifth, Saxon.]
1. The ordinal of five; the next to the fourth.

In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.
Just as I wish'd, the lots were cast on four.
Myself the fifth. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.
2. All the ordinals are taken elliptically for the part which they express: a fifth, a fifth part; a third, a third part.
The publick shall have lost four fifths of its annual income for ever.
FIFTHLY. adv. [from fifth.] In the fifth place.
Fifthly, living creatures have a more exact figure than plants. Bacon's Natural History, No. 607.
FIFTIETH. adj. [fiftieth, Saxon.] The ordinal of fifty.
If this medium be rarer within the sun's body, than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundred part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the fiftieth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opt.
FIFTY. adj. [fifty, Saxon.] Five tens.
A wither'd hermit, five score Winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shakespeare.
Judas ordained captains over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens. 1 Mac. iii. 55.
The breadth of the ark shall be fifty cubits. Gen. vi. 15.

ter, of which there are reckoned up above fifty several significations. Locke.
FIG. n. f. [figus, Latin; figa, Spanish; figue, French.]
1. A tree that bears figs.
The characters are: the flowers, which are always inclosed in the middle of the fruit, consist of the leaf, and are male and female in the same fruit: the male flowers are situated towards the crown of the fruit; and the female, growing near the stalk, are succeeded by small hard seeds: the intire fruit is, for the most part, turbinate and globular, or of an oval shape, is fleshy, and of a sweet taste. Miller.
Full on its crown a fig's green branches rise,
And shoot a leafy forest to the skies. Pope's Odyssey, b. xii.
Or lead me through the maze,
Embowering endless of the Indian fig. Thomson's Summer.
2. A luscious soft fruit; the fruit of the figtree.
It maketh figs better, if a figtree, when it beginneth to put forth leaves, have his top cut off. Bacon's Nat. History.
Figs are great subduers of acrimony. Arbutnot on Diet.
To FIG. v. a. [See FIG.]

A figapple hath no core or kernel, in these resembling a fig, and differing from other apples. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FIGMARGOLD. n. f. A plant. It is succulent, and has the appearance of houseleek: the leaves grow opposite by pairs. Mill.
To FIGHT. v. n. preter. fought; part. pass. fought. [prethan,
Saxon.]
1. To contend in battle; to war; to make war; to battle; to contend in arms. It is used both of armies and single combatants.
King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shak. Hen. VI.
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war. Shaksp.
The common question is, if we must now surrender Spain, what

FIG

what have we been fighting for all this while? The answer is ready: we have been fighting for the ruin of the publick interest, and the advancement of a private. Swift.
For her confederate nations fought, and kings were slain,
Troy was o'erthrown, and a whole empire fell. Phillips.
2. To combat; to duel; to contend in single fight.
One shall undertake to fight against another. 2 Esdr. xiii.
The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
The young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shaksp. Macb.
3. To act as a soldier in any case.
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave. Shak. K. John.

Himself alone, an equal match he boasts,
To *figh*t the Phrygian and the Aulonian hofs. Dryd. En.
FIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Battle.
2. Combat; duel.
Herilus in single *figh*t I flew,
Whom with three lives Perona did endue;
And thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore,
'Till the last ebbing soul return'd no more. Dryden's En.
3. Something to screen the combatants in ships.
FIGHTER. n. f. [from *figh*t.] Warrior; duellist.
I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no *figh*ter. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate *figh*ter! Dryden's All for Love.
FIGHTING. participial adj. [from *figh*t.]
1. Qualified for war; fit for battle.
An host of *figh*ting men went out to war by bands. 2 Chro.
2. Occupied by war; being the scene of war.
In *figh*ting fields, as far the spear I throw
As flies the arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope's Odyssey.
FIGMENT. n. f. [figmentum, Latin.] An invention; a fiction; the idea feigned.
Upon the like grounds was raised the figment of Briareus, who, dwelling in a city called Hecatonchiria, the fancies of those times assigned him an hundred hands. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The most frightful passages, probably so strange as to be hardly credible; it carried rather an appearance of figment and invention, in those that handed down the memory of it, than of truth and reality. Woodward's Natural History.
FIGPECKER. n. f. [fig and peck.] A bird.
FIGULATE. adj. [from figulus, Latin.] Made of potters clay.
FIGURABLE. adj. [from figura, Latin.] Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurable, but not water.
The differences of impenetrable and not impenetrable, figurable and not figurable, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions. Bacon's Natural History.
FIGURABILITY. n. f. [from figurable.] The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.
FIGURAL. adj. [from figura.]
1. Represented by delineation.
Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions. Brown's Vulg. Err.
2. FIGURAL Numbers. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid. Harris.
FIGURATE. adj. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Of a certain and determinate form.
Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined. Bacon.
2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.
3. FIGURATE Counterpoint. [In musick.] That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.
4. FIGURATE Descant. [In musick.] That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as concords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.
FIGURATION. n. f. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Determination to a certain form.
Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The act of giving a certain form.

FIG

If motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
FIGURATIVE. adj. [figurativus, Fr. from figura, Latin.]
1. Representing something else; typical; representative.
This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; where into Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker, b. v. f. 15.
2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning;
not literal.
How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason. Stillingfleet's Def. of Diss. on Rom. Idol.
This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention. Rogers, Sermon 14.
3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical exornations; full of changes from the original sense.
Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions. Dryden's Juvenal, Pref.
FIGURATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.] By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.
The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.
The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uzziah and Ezechias. Brown.
Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.
1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.
Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single musk-roses, single pinks and gilliflowers, &c. which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglafs, &c. which have four leaves. Bacon's Natural History.
Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.
Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.
2. Shape; form; semblance.
He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakespeare.
3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.
The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
E'er I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden's Virgil.
I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison's Spectator.
A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa.
4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.
While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden's En.
The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.
Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison's Guardian.
Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.
Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
5. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.
The several statues, which seem'd at a distance to be made of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison's Freeholder.
6. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.
In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the fineness of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.
7. Arrangement; disposition; modification.
The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts's Logic.
8. A character denoting a number.
Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot Think, speak, call, write, sing, number
His love to Anthony. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop. tra.
He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great

- great talk; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age.
- As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real fums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermon.
- The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.
- We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: the works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and dawning beyond our element. Shakespeare.
- He set a figure to discover.
- If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.
- Figure* flingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange, Fable 94.
10. [In theology.] Type representative.
- Who was the figure of him that is to come. Romans.
11. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are deformed from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are generally confounded by the exactest writers.
- Silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakespeare.
- Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingfleet.
- They have been taught rhetoric, but yet never taught to express themselves in the language they are always to use; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.
12. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.
- To FIGURE. v. a. [figure, Latin.]
1. To form into any determinate shape.
- Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.
- Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryd. Virgil.
2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.
- Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.
- Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye. Pope.
3. To cover or adorn with figures.
- I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakespeare. Richard II.
4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.
- But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakespeare. K. John.
5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.
- When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker, b. v.
- There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
- Marriage rings are not of this stuff:
Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough
Figure our loves? Dante.
- The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison on ancient Medals.
6. To image in the mind.
- None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.
- If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.
7. To prefigure; to foreshow.
- Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
In this the heaven figures some event. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.
- Figured* and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.
- FIGURE-FLINGER. n. f. [figure and fling] A pretender to astrology and prediction.
- Quacks, figure-flingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier of Confidence.

FIL

- FIL*WORT. n. f. [fig and wort.] A plant.
- It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of one leaf, gaping at both sides, and generally globular, cut as it were into two lips, under the upper one of which are two small leaves. Milt.
- FIL*ACEOUS. adj. [filum, Latin.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.
- They make cables of the bark of lime-trees: it is the flalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon's Natural History.
- FIL*ACER. n. f. [filaxarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.
- FIL*AMENT. n. f. [filament, Fr. filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.
- The effluvia passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Bro.
- The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Consumptions.
- The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air
And those fill strike the next, 'till to the light
The quick vibration propagates the light. Blackm. Creation.
- The dung of hories is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- FIL*BERT. n. f. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or hanks, as corrupted from full beard, or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.
- In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barbaries, filberts, muskmelons, monkhoods of all colours. Bacon, Essay 47.
- Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert I have often known Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone. Dorset.
- There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former; the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.
- To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pilage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.
- He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have late being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.
- The champion robbeth by night,
And prowlth and filcheth by daie. Tusser's Husbandry.
- Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare's Othello.
- His thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskilful finger, he kept no time. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
- He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones. Burton on Melancholy.
- What made thee venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.
- The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods. L'Estrange's Fables.
- Fain would they filch that little food away,
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey.
So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Dryden.
- FIL*CHER. n. f. [from filch.] A thief; a petty robber.
- FIL*E. n. f. [file, French; filum, a thread, Latin.]

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.
So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.
They with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Phillips.
Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.
To FILTER. v. a. [filtru, low Latin; per flum trahere.]
1. To decant by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

- vessel, so that the liquor drips from it. See NEW DISPEN-SATORY.
2. A strainer; a searce.
That the water, passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.
FILFTH. n. f. [filð, Saxon.]
1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.
When we in our viciousness grow hard,
The wife gods seal our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgments. Shakespeare.
Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filth favour but themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Natural History.
How perfect then is man? From head to foot Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ience,
To spare the folks that give him hap'ence. Swift.
2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.
Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson's Sermons.
FILTHY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.
It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange, Fable 78.
FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthy.]
1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.
Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney, b. ii.
2. Corruption; pollution.
They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Fairy Queen.
They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Sermons.
FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]
1. Nasty; foul; dirty.
Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
2. Gross; polluted.
As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filtru.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.
The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.
We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.
FIMBLE Hemp. n. f.
The season of pulling of it is first about Lambas, when good part of it will be ripe; that is, the light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Martim. Hub.
Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need,
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her feed. Tuff. Hub.
FIN. n. f. [fin, Saxon; vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish;
the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.
He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with *fin*s of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare's Othello.
Their *fin*s consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Moré's Antid. against Atheism.
Thus at half-ebb a rowling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their *fin*s awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.
Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addison's Metam.
FIN-FOOTED.

FIR

- FIN-FOOTED*. adj. [from fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.
It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in lati-rostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown's Vulg. Err.
FINABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine.
This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bac.

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start. Fai. Queen.
4. Respecting the end or motive.
Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them. Hooker, b. ii.
By its gravity fire raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuity. Ray.
Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier on Thought.
FINALLY. adv. [from final.]

three kinds, the goldfinch, chaffinch, and bulfinch.
To FIND. v. a. [finban, Saxon; vinden, Dutch.]
1. To obtain by searching or seeking.
Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find.
Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff?
A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It sits and sings. Cowley.
2. To obtain something lost.
When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing. Luke xv. 5.
In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot the fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I lost found both. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
3. To meet with; to fall upon.
There watchful at the gate they find Suspicion with her eyes behind. Dodley's Miscell.

1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.
We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of mad men. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
2. One that picks up any thing lost.
Some lewd squeaking cryer,
Well pleas'd with one lean thread-bare groat for hire,
May like a devil roar through every street,
And gall the finder's conscience, if they meet. Downe.
O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crashaw.
FINDER. n. f. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.
We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that

She nam'd not me; that may be Torridomond,
Whom she has thrice in private seen this day:
Then I am finely caught in my own snare. Dryd. Sp. Fryar.

FINE. n. f. [from fine.]

1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.

Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that, if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight. Sidney.

The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character. Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gaiety of appearance.

The fineness of cloaths destroys the ease: it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any: the body may languish under the most splendid cover. Deacy of Piety.

3. Subtlety; artfulness; ingenuity.

Those, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cressida.

4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.

Our works are, indeed, nought else
But the protractive trials of great Jove,
To find perceptive constancy in men;
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height: but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther. Bacon's Natural History.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness, only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness. Arbutnot on Coins.

FINE. n. f. [from fine.] Show; splendour of appearance; gaiety of colours.

FINGER. n. f. [from fine.] One who purifies metals.

Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Prov. xxv. 4.

FINGER. n. f. [finger, Saxon, from sangen, to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger: they are a little convex and round towards the back of the hand, but hollow and plain towards the palm, except the last, where the nails are. The order of their dispositions is called first, second, and third phalanx: the first is longer than the second, and the second longer than the third. The upper extremity of the first bone on each finger has a little sinus, which receives the round head of the bones of the metacarpus. The upper extremity of the second and third bones of each finger hath two small sinuses, parted by a small protuberance; and the lower extremity of the first and second bones of each finger has two protuberances, divided by a small sinus: the two protuberances are received into the two sinuses of the upper extremity of the second and third bones; and the small sinus receives the little protuberance of the same end of the same bones. The first bone of the thumb is like the bones of the metacarpus, and it is joined to the wrist and second of the thumb, as they are to the wrist and first of the fingers. The second bone of the thumb is like the first bones of the fingers, and it is joined to the first and third, as they are to the bones of the metacarpus and second of the fingers. The fingers are moved sideways only upon their first joint. Besides these there are some small bones, called ossa sesamoides, because they resemble sesamum grains: they are reckoned about twelve in each hand: they are placed at the joint of the fingers, under the tendons of the flexors, to which they serve as pulleys. Quincy.

You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Diogenes, who is never said,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger i' th' eye and sob,
Because h' had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray on the Creat.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one found a particular note. Keil against Burnet.

Poor Peg fewed, spun, and knit for a livelihood, 'till her finger ends were fore. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

2. A small measure of extension.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or seven at most, when thickest is the board. Dryd. Juv.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick. Watkins's Math. Mag.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.

Fool, that forgets her stubborn look
This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

To FINGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.

Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;
You would be fingering them to anger me. Shakespeare.

One that is covetous is not so highly pleased with the meer sight and fingering of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. Grew's Cefmol. Sac.

2. To touch unseasonably or thoughtlessly.

His ambition would needs be fingering the scepter, and hoisting him into his father's throne. South's Sermons.

3. To touch an instrument of music.

She hath broke the lute;
I did but tell her she mistook her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering. Shakespeare.

4. To perform any work exquisitely with the fingers.

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.

FINGLE. n. f. [from fangle.] A trifle: a burlesque word.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle,
About the slightest fingle. Hudibras, p. iii. cau. 3.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Notes on the Odyssey.

2. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find,
Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd;
It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind. Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as finish'd as my last work ought to be; that is, more finish'd than the rest. Pope.

3. To end; to put an end to.

FINISHER. n. f. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister. Shakespeare.

2. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the plain condition of those times; the whole world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocence, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.

O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

FINITE. adj. [finitus, Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited at two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley's Sermon.

FINITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FINITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finutely distant from us. Stillingfleet.

FINITENESS. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbury the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FINITUDE. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Cleyn.

FINLESS. adj. [from fin.] Without fins.

He angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

FINLIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untawg Indian, on the stream did glide;

The neighbours are coming out with forks and fireshovels, and spits, and other domestic weapons. Dryden's Span. Fryar.

FIRESTONE. n. f. [fire and stone.]

The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallick earth, but in very different proportions in the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or copperas is procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished. Hill's Mat. Med.

Firestone is a kind of stone called also Rygate stone, from the place whence it is chiefly brought, being very good for firehearth, ovens, and stoves. Builder's Dict.

Firestones, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage. Mortimer's Husband-y.

A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf. Milt. P. L.
The blooming hopes of my then very young patron have been confirmed by most noble first-fruits, and his life is going on towards a plentiful harvest of all accumulated virtues. Prior.
2. The first profits of any thing.
Although the king loved to employ and advance bishops, because, having rich bishopricks, they carried their reward upon themselves; yet he did use to raise them by steps, that he might not lose the profit of the first-fruits, which by that course of gradation was multiplied. Bacon's Henry VII.
3. The earliest effect of any thing.
See, Father, what first-fruits on earth are sprung,
From thy implanted grace in man! Milton's Parad. Lost.
- FIRSTLING. adj. [from first.] That which is first produced losing its transparency, and in a very strong heat calcining without fusion. Newton's Opt.

- FISSILE. n. f. from fissile. The quality of admitting to be cleft.
- FISURE. n. f. [from fissura, Latin; fissure, French.] A cleft; a narrow chasm where a breach has been made.
The stone and other terrestrial matter was distinguished into strata or layers, as it is in England: those strata were divided by parallel fissures, that were inclosed in the stone. Woodward's Natural History.
- I see
The gaping fissures to receive the rain. Thomson's Autumn.
- TO FISURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cleave; to make a fissure.
By a fall or blow the skull may be fissured or fractured. Wife.
- FIST. n. f. [from fist, Saxon.] The hand clenched with the fingers doubled down, in order to give a blow, or keep hold.
She quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wife;
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.
And being down, the villain fore did beat
And bruise with clownish fists his manly face. Fairy Queen.
Anger causeth paleness in some; in others trembling, swelling, foaming at the mouth, stamping, and bending the fist. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 716.
And the same hand into a fist may clofe,
Which instantly a palm expanded shows. Denham.
Tyrrheus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's Æn.

And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakes. Coriolanus.
- FISTINUT. n. f. A pistachio nut.
- FISTICUFFS. n. f. [from fist and cuff.] Battle with the fist; blows with the fist.
Naked men belabouring one another with snagged sticks, or dully falling together by the ears at fisticuffs. More.
She would seize upon John's commons; for which they were sure to go to fisticuffs. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
My invention and judgment are perpetually at fisticuffs, till they have quite disabled each other. Swift.
- FISTULA. n. f. [Latin; fistula, French.]
1. A sinuous ulcer callous within; any sinuous ulcer.
That fistula which is recent is the easiest of cure: those of a long continuance are accompanied with ulcerations of the gland and caries in the bone. Wifeman's Surgery.
2. FISTULA Lacrimalis. A disorder of the canals leading from the eye to the nose, which obstructs the natural progress of the tears, and makes them trickle down the cheek; but this is only the first and mildest stage of the disease: in the next there is matter discharged with the tears from the puncta lacrimalia, and sometimes from an orifice broke through the skin between the nose and angle of the eye. The last and worst degree of it is when the matter of the eye, by its long continuance, has not only corroded the neighbouring soft parts, but also affected the subjacent bone. Sharp's Surgery.
- FISTULAR. adj. [from fistula.] Hollow like a pipe.
- FISTULOUS. adj. [from fistula; fistuleux, French.] Having the nature of a fistula; callous or sinuous like a fistula.
How these sinuous ulcers become fistulous, I have shewn
you. Wifeman's Surgery.

1. A paroxysm or exacerbation of any intermittent distemper.
Small stones and gravel collect and become very large in the kidneys, in which case a fit of the stone in that part is the cure. Sharp's Surgery.
2. Any short return after intermission; interval.
Sometimes 'tis grateful to the rich to try
A short vicissitude, and fit of poverty. Dryden's Horace.
Men that are habitually wicked may now and then, by fits and starts, feel certain motions of repentance. L'Estrange.
By fits, my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs and falling tears. Addison on Italy.
Thus o'er the dying lamp th' unsteady flame
Hangs quivering on a point, leaps off by fits,
And falls again as loth to quit its hold. Addison's Cato.
Religion is not the business of some fits only and intervals of our life, to be taken up at certain days and hours, and laid aside for the rest of our time; but a system of precepts to be regarded in all our conduct. Rogers's Sermons.
All fits of pleasure we balanced by an equal degree of pain or languor: 'tis like spending this year part of the next year's revenue. Swift.
3. Any violent affection of mind or body.
The life did slit away out of her nest,
And all his senses were with deadly fit oppress'd. Fairy Queen.
An ambitious man subjects himself to others, and puts it in the power of every malicious tongue to throw him into a fit of melancholy. Addison's Spectator.
4. Disorder; distemperature.
For your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
5. It is used, without an epithet of discrimination, for the hyfterical disorders of women, and the convulsions of children;
and by the vulgar for the epilepsy.
Mrs. Bull was so much enraged, that she fell downright into a fit. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
- FIT. adj. [written, Flemish, Junius.]
1. Qualified; proper: with for before the noun, and to before the verb.
Mighty men of valour, fit to go out for war and battle.
Chron. vii. 11.
He lends him vain Goliath's sacred sword,
The fittest help just fortune could afford. Cowley's Davideis.
This fury fit for her intent she chose,
One who delights in wars and human woes. Dryden's Æn.
It is a wrong use of my understanding to make it the rule and measure of another man's; a use which it is neither fit for, nor capable of. Locke.
2. Convenient; meet; proper; right.
Since we have said it were good not to use men of ambitious natures, except it be upon necessity, it is fit we speak in what cases they are so. Bacon's Essay 37.
See how thou could'st judge of fit and meet. Milt. P. L.
It is fit for a man to know his own abilities and weaknesses, and not think himself obliged to imitate all that he thinks fit to praise. Boyle.
If our forefathers thought fit to be grave and serious, I hope their posterity may laugh without offence. Addison.
- TO FIT. v. a. [written, Flemish, Junius.]
1. To accommodate to any thing; to suit one thing to another.

planes. J. xlv. 13.
Would fate permit
To my desires I might my fortune fit, Troy I would raise. Denham.
2. To accommodate a person with any thing; as, the tailor fits his customer.
A trussmaker fitted the child with a pair of boddices, stiffened on the lame side. Wifeman's Surgery.
3. To be adapted to; to suit any thing.
She shall be our messenger to this paltry knight: trust me
I thought on her; she'll fit it. Shakespeare.
As much of the stone as was contiguous to the marcasite, fitted the marcasite so close as if it had been formerly liquid. Bo.
4. TO FIT out. To furnish; to equip; to supply with necessaries or decoration.
A play, which if you dare but twice fit out,
You'll all be slander'd, and be thought devout. Dryden.
The English fleet could not be paid and manned, and fitted out, unless we encouraged trade and navigation. Addison's Freeb.
5. TO FIT up. To furnish; to make proper for the use or reception of any.
He has fitted up his farm. Pope to Swift.
- TO FIT. v. n. To be proper; to be fit.
Nor fits it to prolong the heavenly feast, Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest. Pope's Odyss. b. iii.
- FITCH. n. f. [A colloquial corruption of vetch.] A small kind of wild pea.
Now is the season
For sowing of fitches, of beans, and of peason. Tusser.
- FITCHAT. n. f. [from fitch, French; fische, Dutch.] A stinking FITCHET. s. little beast, that robs the henrook and warren.

That envied his receipt, even so most fitly

As you malign our senators. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Where a man cannot fitly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage. Bacon, Essay 28.

I cannot fitlier compare marriage than to a lottery; for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie pretty store of blanks for every prize. Boyle.

The whole of our duty may be expressed most fitly by departing from evil. Tillotson's Sermons.

An animal, in order to be moveable, must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Commodiously; meetly.

To take a latitude,

Sun or stars are fitly view'd

At their brightest; but to conclude

Of longitudes, what other way have we

But to mark when, and where the dark eclipses be. Donne.

FIXTNESS. n. f. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fixtness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgment of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hooker, b. v. f. 7.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fixtness

That we adjourn this court. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Wer't my fixtness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,

They're apt enough to dislocate and tear

Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Nor time nor place

Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:

They've made themselves, and that their fixtness now

Does unmake you. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FIXTMENT. n. f. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose.

Poor beseeching: 'twas a fixtment for

The purpose I then follow'd. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FIXTTER. n. f. [from fit.]

1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.

Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze-seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fixtter of it for corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. [from fetta, Italian: setzen, German.] A small piece: as, to cut into fixtters. Skinner.

FITZ. n. f. [Norman, from fils, a son, Fr.] A son. Only used in law and genealogy: as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzthomas, the son of Thomas; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It is commonly used of illegitimate children.

FIVE. adj. [five, Saxon.] Four and one; half of ten.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. Mat.

No person, no incident, but must be of use to carry on the main design: all things else are like five fingers to the hand, when nature, which is superfluous in nothing, can do her work with five. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Five herds, five bleating flocks, his pastures fill'd;

His lands a hundred yoke of oxen till'd. Dryden's Æn.

Our British youth lose their figure by that time they are five and twenty. Adison's Guardian, N^o. 111.

FIVELY. n. f. [from five.] Cinquefoil; a species of clover.

FIVES. n. f.

1. A kind of play with a bowl.

His horse sped with spavins rayed with the yellows, past cure of the fives, and stark spoiled with the staggers. Shakespeare.

TO FIX. v. a. [fixer, French; fixus, Latin.]

1. To make fast, firm, or stable.

Hell heard the unsufferable noise, hell saw

Heav'n ruining from heav'n, and would have fled

Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep

Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound. Milt. P. L.

2. To settle; to establish invariably.

Brightest scraph! tell

In which of all these orbs hath man

FIX

His fix'd seat, or fix'd seat hath none;

But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell! Milt. P. L.

One loves fix'd laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.

When custom hath fix'd his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.

3. To direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes fix'd to the fullen earth,

Gazing at that which seems to dim thy fight! Shak. H. VI.

Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,

Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprize. Dryden's Æn.

4. To deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fix'd. Locke.

5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies,

A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs. Sandys.

6. To withhold from motion.

TO FIX. v. n.

1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.

If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us. L'Estrange.

He made himself their prey,

T' impose on their belief and Troy betray;

Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent

To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden's Æn.

Here hope began to dawn; and resolv'd to try,

She fix'd on this her utmost remedy,

Death was behind; but hard it was to die. Dryden.

In most bodies, not propagated by feed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

2. To rest; to cease to wander.

Your kindness banishes your fear,

Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Wallar.

3. To lose volatility, so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon's Natural History.

FIXATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

2. Residence in a certain place.

To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or pliancy, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold (if other metals less ponderous and less material, than via versa, to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation. Bacon's Natural History.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved, upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes. Glenn. Seep. c. 7.

FIXEDLY. adv. [from fixed.] Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.

FIXEDNESS. n. f. [from fixed.]

1. Stability; firmness.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

All matter is either fluid or solid, to comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley's Sermon.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. King Charles.

FIXIDITY. n. f. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FIXITV. n. f. [fixiti, French.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them? Newt. Opt.

FLA

FLA. n. f. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixure of her eye hath motion in't,

As we were mock'd with art. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Frights, changes, horrors,

Divert and crack, rend and deracinate

The unity and married calm of states

Quite from their fixure. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cressida.

FLA. n. f. A kind of dart or harpoon with which seamen strike fish.

FLA. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbutnot.

Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop

Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

FLA. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown. Dict.

FLA. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beate waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The furgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce fungules, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbutnot on Diet.

FLA. n. f. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wijeman's Surgery.

TO FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch; pleogan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in the which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,

Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings

Clip dead men's graves. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor funk the sun,

The promise of a storm; the shifting gales

Forfake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,

Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along

As if he were a body in a body:

My senses too are dull and stupidly'd,

Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches. Dryd. D. Seb.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

His stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour, and grow peevish if he passes it; either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

There must be a noble train of actions to preserve his fame in life and motion; for, when it is once at a stand, it naturally flags and languishes. Adison's Spectator, N^o. 256.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,

My love above the starry vault I raise,

Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,

I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

TO FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;

As well as Cupid, Time is blind:

Soon must those glories of thy face

The fate of vulgar beauty find:

The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,

Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die. Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor are all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

FLA

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward on Fossils.

FLAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a broad bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Ex. ii. 3.

Can bulrushes but by the river grow?

Can flags there flourish where no waters flow. Sandys.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton's Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds. Mortimer.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,

Before the eye and prospect of your town,

Have hither march'd to your endamage. Shak. K. J. bn.

He hangs out as many flags as he decrieth vessels; square, if ships; if gallees, pendants. Sandys's Travels.

Let him be girt

With all the grisly legions that troop

Under the footy flag of Acheron,

Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms

'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him cut,

And force him to restore his purchase back,

Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.

The French and Spaniard, when your flags appear,

Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either flag the golden serpents bear,

Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,

And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden's Aurenga.

Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,

In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,

And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair. Dryden's Æn.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [jacches, old French]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward's Met. Foss.

FLAG-BROOM. n. f. [from flag and broom.] A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

By Bridewell all descend,

As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth's Dispens.

FLAGGINESS. n. f. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLAGGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,

Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind

Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. Fairy Queen, b. i.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,

And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryden's Virgil.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon's Natural History.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Latin.] Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villany or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,

Pregnant with unknown crimes,

Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Adison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,

Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and four disdain,

Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,

Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.

FLA

FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitiosus.] Wickedness; villainy.

FLAGON. n. f. [flaccus, Welsh; flaxe, Saxon; flafke, Danish; flacon, French; flasco, Italian; flasca, Spanish.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once.

More had sent him by a sutor in Chancery two silver flagons.

Did they coin pipots, bowls, and flagons?

Int' officers of horse and dragoons? Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,

Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Roscommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or tint him of his drink. Dryd. Juv.

FLAGRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon's Natural History.

FLAGRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker, b. v. f. 39.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sapho, at her toilet's greasy task,

And idling flagrant to an evening mask:

So morning insects, that in muck begun,

Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope's Epistles.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,

The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect flame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poize let steady justice sway,

And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;

But, till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay. Smith.

FLAGRATION. n. f. [flagro, Latin.] Burning. Diét.

FLAGSTAFF. n. f. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,

On wings of all the winds to combat flies:

His murdering guns a loud defiance rear,

And bloody crosses on his flagstaffs rise. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; fliegel, German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,

Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,

Fell gently down as if they struck their friends. Sh. H. VI.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,

His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,

That ten day-labourers could not end,

Then lies him down the lubbar-fend. Milton.

In this pile should reign a mighty prince,

Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense. Dryden.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms, nor make them less able in the arts of war and government. Locke.

The thresher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE. n. f. [flaccus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

O crimson circles, like red flakes in the element, when the weather is hottest. Sidney, b. ii.

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,

Him all amaz'd, and almost made afraid. Fairy Queen.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burn.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clutched together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew's Cosmolog. Sacra, b. i. c. 3.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison on Italy.

2. A stratum; layer; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,

As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.

A labourer in his left hand holding the head of the center-pin, and with his right drawing about the beam and teeth, which cut and tore away great flakes of the metal, 'till it received the perfect form the teeth would make. Moxon.

TO FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

FLA

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow;

Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow. Pope's Odyss.

FLAKY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hoar flake on,

And flaky darkness breaks within the East. Shakel. Rich. III.

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,

With sparks that seem to set the world on fire. Pope.

Hence, when the snows in Winter cease to weep,

And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,

The banks with ease their humble streams contain,

Which swell in Summer, and those banks disdain. Blackm.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lye; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry

Of old aruspicy and aug'ry. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South's Sermons.

What are most of the histories of the world but lyes?

Lyes immortalized and consign'd over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South's Sermons.

FLAM. n. f. [from the French flamme, a flame.] A transient blaze; a sudden explosion of flame from fat or dripping; and so in Scotland transferred to any thing glowing and flashily illusory.

TO FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lye. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,

To damn ourselves 't avoid being damn'd. Hudibras, p. iii.

God is not to be flam'd off with lyes, who knows exactly what thou can't do, and what not. South's Sermons.

FLAMBEAU. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton's Opt.

What flame, what lightning e'er

So quick an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;

The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,

This and Philaster have the loudest fame;

Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:

In both our English genius is express'd,

Lofty and bold, but negligently dress'd. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Snit with the love of kindred arts we came,

And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire

To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove

All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;

Swiftly like sudden death it came:

I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

TO FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakel.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky

To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Hell all around

As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,

Now break'd and glowing with the morning red;

Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,

And chusing fable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flamecoloured stockings. Shakelpeare's Twelfth Night.

FLAMY. adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; flaming.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,

With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon's Natural History.

FLANK. n. f. [flanc, French, according to Ménage, from λαγαν; more probably from latus, Latin.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank. Peach.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He said, and, pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:

Through Paris shield the forceful weapon went,

His corset pierces, and his garment rends,

And glancing downward near his flank descends. Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the gallees that lay at sea in flank. Bacon's War with Spain.

The other half of the battle, and the whole flank of the rear, was closed by the carriages. Hayward.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy. Hayward.

To right and left the front

Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harris.

TO FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side; to be on the side.

With fates averse, against their king's command,

Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,

And flank the passage. Dryden's Æn.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,

Which flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay. Dryden.

FLANKER. n. f. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and fore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knight's History of the Turks.

TO FLANKER. v. a. [flanquer, French.] To defend by lateral fortifications.

FLANNEL. n. f. [gulanen, Welch, from gulan, wool, Davies.] A soft nappy stuff of wool.

FLAP. n. f. [loeppe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps. Sharp's Surgery.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]

When a horse is said to have the flaps, you may perceive his lips to be swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg; you must, to cure it, cut some flashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure. Farrier's Diét.

TO FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flapt off the former, and devoured the other. L'Estrange.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,

This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings. Pope.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

The dila flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.

FLA

With fruitless toil

Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate

Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Philist.

Three times, all in the dead of night,

A bell was heard to ring;

And shrieking at her window thrice

The raven flapt d his wing. Tickell.

TO FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young. L'Estrange.

2. To fall with flaps, or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,

Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;

This knows the powder'd footman, and with care

Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay's Trivia.

FLAPDRAGON. n. f.

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

TO FLAPDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow; to devour.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flap-dragoned it. Shakelpeare's Winter's Tale.

FLAPPEARED. adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whorlson, beetleheaded, flappeared knave. Shakelpeare.

TO FLARE. v. n. [from fladerin, to flutter; Dutch, Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from glare.]

1. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd,

With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head. Shakelpeare.

2. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours and light, in one

When they combine and mingle, bring

A strong regard and awe; but speech alone

Doth vanish like a flaring thing. Herbert.

3. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to fling

His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring

To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton.

4. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay

Flaring in sunshine all the day. Prior.

FLASH. n. f. [φάεξ, Minbew.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open

The breast of heav'n, I did present myself

Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it. Shakel. Juv. Caesar.

We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard. Bacon's Natural History, No. 210.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smok;

The other out of smok brings glorious light. Roscommon.

And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,

Defy'd the fork lightning from afar,

At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,

And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires. Dryd. Æn.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?

your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar?

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

TO FLASH. v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.

This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was, by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times almost like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other,

That sets us all at odds. Shakelpeare's King Lear.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Felton on the Claphams.

TO FLASH. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flapt d

The waves about, and all his armour swept,

That all the blood and filth away was wash'd. Fairy Queen.

If the sea-water be flashed with a stick or oar, the same causeth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

FLASHER

FLA

FLA'SHER. n. f. [from flash.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality. Diſt.
FLA'SHLY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty ſhow; without real power of wit or ſolidity of thought.
FLA'SHY. adj. [from flashy.]
 1. Empty; not ſolid; ſhowy without ſubſtance.
Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large diſcourſe.
 When they liſt, their lean and flashy ſongs
 Grate on their ſcrannel pipes of wretched ſtraw. Milton.
 This mean conceit, this darling myſtery,
 Which thou think'ſt nothing, friend! thou ſhalt not buy;
 Nor will I change for all the flashy wit. Dryden's Perſ. Sat.
 2. [From ſtaccidus, Skinner.] Inſipid; without force or ſpirit.
 Diſtilled books are, like common diſtilled waters, flashy things. Bacon, Eſſay 51.

 Is ſet on fire. Shakeſpeare.
FLA'SKET. n. f. [from flask.] A veſſel in which viands are ſerved.
 Another place'd
 The ſilver ſtands, with golden flaſkets grac'd. Pope's Odeſſ.
FLAT. adj. [plat, French.]
 1. Horizontally level without inclination.
 Thou all-ſhaking thunder,
 Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shak. K. Lear.
 The houſes are flat roofed to walk upon, ſo that every bomb that fell on them would take effect. Addiſon on Italy.
 2. Smooth; without protuberances.
 In the dawning of the next day we might plainly diſcern it was a land flat to our fight, and full of boſcage. Bacon.
 3. Without elevation.
 Ceate t' admire, and beauty's plumes
 Fall flat, and ſhrink into a trivial toy,
 At every ſudden ſighting quite abaſht. Milton's Par. Loſt.
 4. Level with the ground.
 In them is plainest taught, and eaſieſt learnt,
 What makes a nation happy, and keeps it ſo,
 What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat. Milt. Par. Reg.
 That Chriſt-church ſtands above ground, and that the church of Weſtminſter lies not flat upon it, is your lordſhip's commendation. South.
 5. Lying horizontally proſtrate; lying along.
 The wood-born people fall before her flat,
 And worſhip her as goddeſſes of the wood. Fairy Queen, b. i.

 Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground. Daniel.
 6. [In painting.] Without relief; without prominence of the figures.
 7. Taſteleſs; inſipid; dead.
 He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
 The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Sh. Troil. and Cref.
 Taſte ſo divine! that what of ſweet before Hath touch'd my ſenſe, flat ſeems to this and harſh. Milton.
 The miry fields,
 Rejoicing in rich mold, moſt ample fruit
 Of beauteous form produce; pleaſing to ſight,
 But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Phillips.
 8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.
 Short ſpeeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be ſhot out of ſecret intentions; but as for large diſcourſes, they are flat things, and not ſo much noted. Bacon, Eſſay 16.
 Some ſhort excuſions of a broken vow
 He made indeed, but flat inſipid ſuff. Dryd. Don Sebastian.
 9. Depreſſed; ſpiritleſs; dejected.
 My hopes all flat, nature within me ſeems
 In all her functions weary of herſelf. Milton's Agoniſtes.
 10. Unpleaſing; taſteleſs.
 How weary, ſtate, flat and unprofitable
 Seem to me all the uſes of this world! Shakeſp. Hamlet.
 To one firmly perſuaded of the reality of heavenly happi-neſs, and earneſtly deſirous of obtaining it, all earthly ſatisfactions muſt needs look little, and grow flat and unfavoury. Atterbury's Sermons.
 11. Peremptory; abſolute; downright.
 His horſe with flat tiring taught him, that diſcrete ſtays make ſpeedy journeys. Sidney.
 It is a flat wrong to puniſh the thought or purpoſe of any before it be enacted; for true juſtice puniſheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spencer's State of Ireland.
 As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, ſo they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousneſs. Spencer.
 You ſtart away,
 And lend no ear unto my purpoſes;
 Thoſe priſoners you ſhall keep:
 —I will, that's flat. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. i.

FLA

Thus repulſ'd, our final hope
 Is flat deſpair: we muſt exaſperate
 Th' Almighty Viſtor to ſpend all his rage,
 And that muſt end us. Milton's Paradise Loſt, b. ii.
 If thou ſin in wine or wantonneſs,
 Boaſt not thereof, nor make thy ſhame thy glory;
 Frailty gets pardon by ſubmiſſiveneſs:
 But he that boatts, ſhuts that out of his ſtory:
 He makes flat war with God, and doth defy
 With his meer clod of earth the ſpacious ſky. Herbert.
 You had broke and robb'd his houſe,
 And ſole his talismanique loſe;
 And all his new-found old inventions,
 With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.
 12. Not ſhrill; not acute; not ſharp in found.
 If you ſtop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noiſe or rattle. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
 The upper end of the windpipe is endued with ſeveral car-tilages and muſcles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or ſharp. Ray on the Creation.
FLAT. n. f.
 1. A level; an extended plane.
 The ſtrings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater found, by reaſon of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
 Becauſe the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expoſe ſheſh or fiſh, both upon a ſhale of wood ſome height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
 It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers diſtinct eminences appear a flat by force of ſhadows, and yet the ſha-dows themſelves not to appear. Wotton's Architecture.
 He has cut the ſide of the rock into a flat for a garden;
 and by laying on it the waſte earth, that he has found in ſeveral of the neighbouring parts, furniſhed out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addiſon on Italy.
 2. Even ground; not mountainous.
 Now pile your duſt upon the quick and dead,
 Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
 T' o'er top old Pelion, or the ſkyliſh head
 Of blue Olympus. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.
 The way is ready and not long,
 Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
 Faſt by a mountain. Milton's Paradise Loſt, b. ix.
 3. A ſmooth low ground expoſed to inundations.
 The ocean, overpeering of his liſt,
 Eats not the flats with more impetuous haſte,
 Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
 O'erbears your officers. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.
 All the infections, that the ſun ſucks up
 From bogs, fens, flats, on Proſpero fall. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.
 Half my pow'r's this night,
 Paſſing the flats, are taken by the tide;
 Theſe Lincoln waſhes have devour'd them. Shak. K. John.
 4. Shallow; ſtrand; place in the ſea where the water is not deep enough for ſhips.
 I ſhould not ſee the ſandy hour-glaſs run,
 But I ſhould think of ſhallows and of flats. Shakeſpeare.
 The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through ſo many flats and ſands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Eſſay.
 Having newly left theſe grammatick flats and ſhallows, where they ſtuck unreaſonably, to learn a few words with lamentable conſtructions, we are now on the ſudden tormolled with their unballaſted wits in fathomleſs and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton on Education.
 Full in the prince's paſſage hills of ſand,
 And dang'rous flats, in ſecret ambuſh lay,
 Where the falſe tides ſkim o'er the cover'd land,
 And ſeaſmen with diſſembled depths betray. Dryden.
 The ſea could not be narrower than it is, without a great loſs to the world; and muſt we now have an ocean of mere flats and ſhallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.
 5. The broad ſide of a blade.
 A dartaed mandate came
 From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
 Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
 To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;
 My flaming ſword above 'em to diſplay,
 All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
 The flat to ſweep the viſions from thy mind,
 The edge to cut 'em through that ſtay behind. Dryden.
 6. Depreſſion of thought or language.
 Milton's Paradise Loſt is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongſt his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along ſometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.
 7. A ſurface without relief, or prominences.
 Are there then ſuch raviſhing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a ſufficient compenſation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the laſting hills. Bentley's Sermons.

FLA

To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To level; to depreſs; to make broad and ſmooth.
 The ancients ſay, if you take two twigs of ſeveral fruit-trees, and flat them on the ſides, and bind them cloſe, and ſet them in the ground, they will come up in one ſtock. Bacon.
 With horrid ſwells ſhe does her ſons expoſe,
 Diffends their ſwelling lips, and flats their noſe. Creech.
 2. To make vapid.
 An orange, lemon and apple, wrap in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four foot deep within the earth, though in a moiſt place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwiſe freſh in their colour, but their juice ſomewhat flatted. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N^o. 377.
 To FLAT. v. n.
 1. To grow flat: oppoſed to ſwell.
 I burnt it the ſecond time, and obſerved the ſkin ſhrink, and the ſwelling to flat yet more than at firſt. Temple.
 2. To obſtruct; retard; hinder; to render unanimated or evanid.
 Nor are conſtant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the ſpirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confuſed variety to diſtract and loſe it. K. Charles.
FLATLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downwards;
 not edgewise.
 What a blow was there given?
 —An it had not fallen flatlong. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.
FLATLY. adv. [from flat.]
 1. Horizontally; without inclination.
 2. Without prominence or elevation.
 3. Without ſpirit; dully; frigidly.
 4. Peremptorily; downright.
 He in theſe wars had flatly refus'd his aid. Sidney, b. ii.
 Thereupon they flatly diſavouch
 To yield him more obedience, or ſupport. Daniel's Ci. War.
 Unjuſt, thou ſay'ſt,
Flatly unjuſt, to bind with laws the free. Milt. Parad. Loſt.
 Not any interpreters allow it to be ſpoke of ſuch as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his exiſtence, do yet include him from directing the affairs of the world. Bentley's Sermons.
FLATNESS. n. f. [from flat.]
 1. Evenneſs; level extension.
 2. Want of relief or prominence.
 It appears ſo very plain and uniform, that one would think the corner looked on the flatneſs of a figure, as one of the greateſt beauties in ſculpture. Addiſon on ancient Medals.
 3. Deadneſs; inſipidity; vapidneſs.
 Deadneſs or flatneſs in cyder is often occaſioned by the too free admixture of air into the veſſel. Mortimer's Huſbandry.
 4. Dejection of ſtate.
 The emperor of Ruſſia was my father:
 Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
 His daughter's trial! that he did but ſee
 The flatneſs of my miſery! Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.
 5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of ſpirit.
 6. Dulneſs; inſipidity; frigidly.
 How faſt does obſcurity, flatneſs, and impertinency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult talk to talk to the purpoſe, and to put life and perſpicuity into our diſcourſes. Collier.
 Some of Homer's tranſlators have ſwelled into fuſtian, and others funk into flatneſs. Pope's Preface to Homer.
 7. The contrary to ſhrilleſs or acuteness of ſound.
 Take two ſaucers, and ſtrike the edge of the one againſt
 the bottom of the other within a pail of water, and you ſhall find the ſound groweth more flat, even while part of the ſaucer is above the water; but that flatneſs of ſound is joined with a
 To FLATTEN. v. a. [ſlatir, French, from flat.]
 1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.
 2. To beat down to the ground.
 If they ſhould lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will riſe again. Mortimer's Huſbandry.
 3. To make vapid.
 4. To deject; to depreſs; to diſpirit.
 To FLATTEN. v. n.
 1. To grow even or level.
 2. To grow dull and inſipid.
 Here joys that endure for ever, freſh and in vigour, are oppoſed to ſatiſactions that are attended with ſatiety and ſurfeits, and flatten in the very taſting. L'Eſtrange, Fable 161.
FLATTER. n. f. [from flat.] The workman or instrument by which bodies are flattened.
 To FLATTER. v. a. [ſlater, French.]
 1. To ſooth with praifes; to pleaſe with blandiſhments; to gratify with ſervile obſequiouſneſs; to gain by falſe compliments.
 When I tell him he hates flatterers,
 He ſays he does; being then moſt flattered. Shak. Jul. Caſ.
 His nature is too noble for the world;
 He would not flatten Neptune for his trident,
 Or Jove for's power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;
 What his braſt' forges, that his tongue muſt vent. Shakeſp.
 He that flattereth his neighbour, ſpreadeth a net for his feet. Prov. xxix. 5.

FLA

He flattereth himſelf in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Pſ. xxxvii. 2.
 After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their poſſeſſions. Decay of Piety.
 Avert ſe alike to flatter or offend. Pope.
 They flatter'd ev'ry day, and ſome days eat. Pope.
 I ſcorn to flatter you or any man. Dr. Newton's Ded. to Milt.
 2. To praife falſely.
Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,
 Provoke our cenſure. Young.
 3. To pleaſe; to ſooth. This ſenſe is purely Gallick.
 A conſort of voices ſupporting themſelves by their different parts make a harmony, pleaſingly fills the ears and flatters them. Dryden's Duſſefroy.
 4. To raiſe falſe hopes.
 He always vacant, always amiable,
 Hopes thee, of flatter ring gales Unmindful. Milton.
FLATTERER. n. f. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleaſing flatteries.
 When I tell him he hates flatterers,
 He ſays he does; being then moſt flattered. Shak. Jul. Caſ.
 Some praifes proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may ſerve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's ſelf. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is con-ſcious to himſelf that he is moſt defective, and is moſt out of countenance in himſelf, that will the flatterer entitle him to performe. Bacon, Eſſay 51.
 If we from wealth to poverty deſcend,
 Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend. Dryden.
 After treating her like a goddeſs, the huſband uſes her like a woman: what is ſtill worſe, the moſt abject flatterers degenerate into the greateſt tyrants. Addiſon's Guardian, N^o. 113.
 The publick ſhould know this of your ladyſhip; yet whoever goes about to inform them, ſhall be cenſured for a flatterer. Swift.
FLATTERY. n. f. [from flatter; ſlaterie, French.] Falſe praife;
 artful obſequiouſneſs; adulation.
 Minds, by nature great, are conſcious of their greatneſs,
 And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery. Rowe.
 Simple pride for flattery makes demands. Pope.
 See how they beg an alms of flattery!
 They languish, O! ſupport them with a lye. Young.
FLATTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatneſs.
 Theſe are from three inches over to fix or ſeven, and of a *flat*iſh ſhape. Woodward on Poſſils.
FLATULENCY. n. f. [from flatulent.]
 1. Windineſs; fulneſs of wind; turgeſcence by wind confined.
 Vegetable ſubſtances contain a great deal of air, which expands itſelf, producing all the diſorders of flatulency. Arbutnot.
 2. Emptineſs; vanity; levity; airineſs.
 Whether moſt of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypotheſis they claim to, may be determined by any that conſiders the natural flatulency of that airy ſcheme of nations. Glanville.
FLATULENT. adj. [flatulentus, flatus, Latin.]
 1. Turgid with air; windy.
 Peaſe are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when diſſolved by digeſtion. Arbutnot.
Flatulent tumours are ſuch as eaſily yield to the preſſure of the finger; but readily return, by their elatiſcity, to a tumid ſtate again: theſe are ſo light as ſcarce to be felt by the patient, and no otherwiſe inconvenient than by their unſightlineſs or bulk. Quincy.
 2. Empty; vain; big without ſubſtance or reality; puffy.
 To talk of knowledge, from thoſe few indiſtinct repreſen-tations which are made to our groſſer faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glanv. Scrif. c. 23.
 How many of theſe flatulent writers have funk in their reputation, after ſeven or eight editions of their works. Dryden.
FLATUOSITY. n. f. [flatuſiſ, French, from flatus, Latin.]
 Windineſs; fulneſs of air.
 The cauſe is flatuſiſ; for wind ſtirred, moveth to expel;
 and all purgers have in them a raw ſpirit or wind, which is the principal cauſe of tenſion in the ſtomach and belly. Bacon.
FLATUOUS. adj. [from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.
 Rhubarb in the ſtomach, in a ſmall quantity, doth digeſt and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathſome; and ſo ſend-eth it to the meſentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N^o. 44.
FLATUS. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, cauſed by indigeſtion and a groſs internal peripa-ration; which is therefore diſcuſſed by warm aromatics. Quinc.
FLATWISE. adj. [flat and wiſe: ſo it ſhould be written, not flatways.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.
 Its poſture in the earth was flatwiſe, and parallel to the ſite of the ſtratium in which it was reſepited. Woodward on Poſſils.

FLA

To FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove

With flaunting honeyfuckle.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to im-molate their own desires to their vanity.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,

And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine.

You sit, you loiter about alchouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;

One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade.

FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how

Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold

The sternness of his presence!

FLA'VOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,

With bending heads, so nigh their bloom disclose,

Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows.

FLA'VOUROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degenerate there, and fruits decline'd

From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [FLAW, to break; plo, Saxon, a fragment;

flaw, Dutch, broken in mind.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws,

Or ere I weep.

Wool, new-thorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of ver-juice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the ver-juice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bungle open.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found;

'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound.

As if great Atlas, from his height,

Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;

And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and, rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,

Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin.

2. A fault; defect.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scri-veners and brokers do value unsound men to serve their own turn.

Traditions were a proof alone,

Could we be certain such they were, so known:

But since some flaws in long descents may be,

They make not truth, but probability.

And laid her dowry out in law,

To null her jointure with a flaw.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from fio, Latin.]

Being incens'd, he's flint;

As humorous as Winter, and as sudden

As flaws congealed in the spring of day.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a wall, & expel the Winter's flaw.

As a huge fish, laid

Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw

Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,

Was foil'd Eurialus.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,

And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,

Boreas, and Cæcias, and Arctes loud,

And Thracias rend the woods, and seas upturn.

I heard the rack,

As earth and sky would mingle; but myself

Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,

Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,

Are to the main inconsiderable.

FLA

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,

Until the golden circuit on my head

Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,

The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,

And deluges of armies from the town

Came pouring in: I heard the mighty flaw;

When first it broke, the crowding enigmis saw

Which choak'd the passage.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts;

Impostors to true fear, would become

A woman's story at a Winter's fire.

To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,

Alack, too weak the conflict to support;

'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,

Burst smilingly.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,

The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd

Our merchants goods.

FLA'WLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous.

FLAWN. n. f. [plena, Saxon; flan, French; wlaye, Dutch.]

A fort of custard; a pie baked in a dish.

To FLA'WTER. v. a. To scrape or pare a skin.FLA'WY. adj. [from flaw.] Full of flaws.FLAX. n. f. [pleax, plex, Saxon; vlas, Dutch.]

1. The fibrous plant of which the finest thread is made.

The leaves, for the most part, grow alternately on branches:

the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulous, and divided into five parts at the top; the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a clove gillflower: the ova-ry, which rises from the centre of the flowercup, becomes an almost globular fruit, which is generally pointed, and composed of many cells, in which are lodged many plain smooth seeds, which are blunt at one end, and generally sharp at the other. The species are fix. The first sort is that which is cultivated for use in divers parts of Europe, and is reckoned an excellent commodity. It should be cultivated.

2. The fibres of flax cleaned and combed for the spinner.

I'll fetch some flax, and whites of eggs,

'T' apply to's bleeding face.

Then on the rock a scanty measure place

Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace,

And turning fung.

FLA'XCOMB. n. f. [flax and comb.] The instrument with which the fibres of flax are cleaned from the brittle parts.

FLA'XRESSER. n. f. [flax and dress.] He that prepares flax for the spinner.

FLA'XEN. adj. [from flax.]

1. Made of flax.

The matron, at her nightly task,

With pensive labour draws the flaxen thread.

The best materials for making ligatures are the flaxen thread that shoemakers use.

2. Fair, long and flowing, as if made of flax.

I bought a fine flaxen long wig, that cost me thirty guineas.

FLA'XWEED. n. f. A plant.To FLAY. v. a. [ad flaa, Islandick; flaa, Danish; vlaen, Dut.]

1. To strip of the skin.

I must have suffered famine, been eaten with wild beasts, or have fallen into the hands of the Spaniards, and been flayed alive.

While the old levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices.

Then give command the sacrifice to haste;

Let the flay'd victims in the plains be cast;

And sacred vows, and mystick songs, apply'd

To grisly Pluto and his gloomy bride.

2. To take off the skin or surface of any thing.

They flay their skin from off them, break their bones, and chop them in pieces.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches.

FLA'YER. n. f. [from flay.] He that strips off the skin of any thing.

FLEA. n. f. [plea, Saxon; vloye, Dutch; fleach, Scottish.] A small red insect remarkable for its agility in leaping, which sucks the blood of larger animals.

While wormwood hath fed, get a handful or twain;

To save against March to make flea to refrain:

FLE

Where chamber is sweep'd, and wormwood is strown,

No flea for his life date abide to be known.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture.

A valiant flea, that dares eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

To FLEA. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from fleas.FLE'ABANE. n. f. [flea and bane.] A plant.

It hath undivided leaves, which, for the most part, are glutinous, and have a strong scent: the cup of the flower is for the most part scaly, and of a cylindrical form: the flower is composed of many florets, which are succeeded by seeds with a downy substance adhering to them.

FLE'ABITE. n. f. [flea and bite.]

1. Red marks caused by fleas.

The attendance of a cancer is commonly a breaking out all over the body, like a fleabiting.

2. A small hurt or pain like that caused by the sting of a flea.

A gout, a cholick, a cutting off an arm or leg, or feasting the flesh, are but fleabites to the pains of the soul.

The same expence that breaks one man's back, is not a flea-biting to another.

FLE'ABITTEN. adj. [flea and bite.]

1. Stung by fleas.

2. Mean; worthless.

Fleabitten lynchod, an assembly brew'd

Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude

Chaos of preb'ytry, where laymen guide,

With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.

FLE'AK. v. a. [from fleas, Latin. See FLAKE.] A small lock, thread, or twist.

The business of men depend upon these little long fleas or threads of hemp and flax.

FLEAM. n. f. [corrupted from φλεβοτομος, the instrument used in phlebotomy.] An instrument used to bleed cattle, which is placed on the vein, and then driven by a blow.

FLE'AWORT. n. f. [flea and wort.] A plant.

This plant agrees with plantain and buckthorn-plantain in every respect, excepting that this rises up with leafy stalks, and divides into many branches; whereas both the others produce their flowers upon naked pedicels.

To FLECK. v. a. [fleck, German, a spot, Skinner: perhaps itis derived from fleck, or fleke, an old word for a grate, hurdle, or any thing made of parts laid transverse, from the Islandick fleke.] To spot; to streak; to stripe; to dapple; to variegate.

Let it not see the dawning fleck the skies,

Nor the grey morning from the ocean rise.

Fleck'd in her face, and with disorder'd hair,

Her garments ruffled, and her bosom bare.

Both fleck'd with white, the true Arcadian strain.

To FLECKER. v. a. [from fleck.] To spot; to mark with strokes or touches of different colours; to mark with red whelks.

The grey-ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,

Check ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light;

And darkness fleck'd, like a drunkard, reels

From forth day's path, and Titan's burning wheels.

FLED. The preterite and participle not properly of fly, to use the wings, but of flee, to run away.

The truth is fled far away, and leaving is hard at hand.

In vain for life he to the altar fled;

Ambition and revenge have certain speed.

FLEDGE. adj. [fledgers, to fly, Dutch.] Full-feathered; able to fly; qualified to leave the nest.

We did find

The shells of fledg'd souls left behind.

His locks behind,

Illustrious on his shoulders, fledg'd with wings,

Lay waving round.

To FLEDGE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To furnish with wings; to supply with feathers.

The birds were not as yet fledg'd enough to shift for themselves.

The speedy growth of birds that are hatched in nests, and fed by the old ones 'till they be fledg'd, and come almost to full bigness in about a fortnight, seems to me an argument of providence.

The fandals of celestial mould,

Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,

Surround her feet.

To FLEE. v. n. pret. fled. [This word is now almost univer-sally written fly, though properly to fly, pleogan, is to move with wings, and flee, plean, to run away. They are now confounded.] To run from danger; to have recourse to shelter.

Behold, this city is near to flee unto.

Were men so dull they could not see

That Lyce painted; should they flee

FLE

Like simple birds into a net,

So grossly woven and ill set?

There are none of us fall into those circumstances of danger, want, or pain, that we can have hopes of relief but from God alone; none in all the world to flee to, but him.

FLEECE. n. f. [fley, Saxon; vlesse, Dutch.] As much wool as is shorn from one sheep.

Giving account of the annual increase

Both of their lambs and of their woolly fleece.

So many days my ewes have been with young,

So many months ere I shall shear the fleece.

I am shepherd to another man,

And do not shear the fleeces that I graze.

Her funny locks

Hang on her temples like a golden fleece.

Sailors have used every night to hang fleeces of wool on the sides of their ships, towards the water; and they have cruised fresh water out of them in the morning.

The sheep will prove much to the advantage of the woollen manufacture, by the fineness of the fleeces.

To FLEECE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To clip the fleece off a sheep.

2. To strip; to pull; to plunder, as a sheep is robbed of his wool.

Courts of justice have a small pension, so that they are change the disposition of the mind. Dist.

FLEXIBILITY. n. f. [flexibilitas, French, from flexible.]
1. The quality of admitting to be bent; pliancy.
Do not the rays which differ in refrangibility differ also in flexibility? And are they not, by their different inflexions, separated from one another, so as after separation to make the colours? Newton's Opt.
Corpuacles of the same set agree in every thing; but those that are of diverse kinds differ in specific gravity, in hardness, and in flexibility, as in bigness and figure. Woodward.
2. Easiness to be persuaded; ductility of mind; compliance; facility.
Advise me to resolve rather to err by too much flexibility than too much perverseness, by meekness than by self-love.
Hammond's Pract. Catech.
FLEXIBLE. adj. [flexibilis, Latin; flexible, French.]

2. A double; a bending; part bent; joint.
Of a sinuous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made. Bacon's Natural History, No. 222.
3. A turn towards any part or quarter.
Pity causeth sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside. Bacon's Natural History, No. 71.
FLEXOR. n. f. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.
Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Aruth.
FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Latin.]
1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.
In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow crannies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible. Digby on the Soul.
2. Bending; not straight; variable; not steady.
The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we do not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet. Bacon's Natural History.
FLEXURE. n. f. [flexura, Latin.]
1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.
Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.
2. The act of bending.
The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shak. Trill. and Cress.
3. The part bent; the joint.
His mighty strength lies in his able loins,
And where the flexure of his navel joins. Sandys.
4. Obsequious or servile cringe.
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bends? Shak. Hen. V.
To FLICKER. v. a. [flickeren, Dutch; pliccepan, Saxon.]
To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.
Under th' allowance of your grand aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Phoebus' front. Shakespeare's King Lear.
'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flick'ring on her nest, made short essays to sing. Dry.
At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.
FLIER. n. f. [from fly.]
1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.
Canst thou from where they made the stand?
—I did;
Though you, it seems, came from the fliers. Shak. Cymbel.
The gates are open, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.
2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.
The flier, tho't had leaden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't. Swift.
FLIGHT. n. f. [from To fly.]
1. The act of flying or running from danger.
And now, too late, he wishes for the fight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight. Denham.
He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryd. Ind. Em.
As eager of the chace, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,
Pursu'd her flight; her flight increas'd his fire. Pope.
2. Removal to another place.
The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latian palace took her flight. Dryden's Aen.
3. The act of using wings; volation.
For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser's Maids of the Moir.
Winds that tempest's brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spire. Dryden.
4. Removal

FLI

4. Removal from place to place by means of wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Esd. v. 6.
Fowls, by Winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden's Æn.
5. A flock of birds flying together.
Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds; and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited unto it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon's New Atlantis.
I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup attend. Milton's Par. Lost.
6. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.
A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.
At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threefold Scots they flew. Cherry Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Gulliver's Travels.
8. The space pass'd by flying.
9. Heat of imagination; rally of the soul.
Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He shew'd all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was but because he attempted every thing. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
Strange graces still, and stranger flights the had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope, Epistle ii.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.
10. Excursion on the wing.
If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interest of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.
It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride these things. Tillotson, Sermon 2.
11. The power of flying.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight.
The self-same way. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
- FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]
1. Fleeting; swift.
Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
2. Wild; full of imagination.
FLIMSY. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]
1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.
2. Mean; spiritless; without force.
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope, Epistle ii.
- TO FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner.]
1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.
Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South's Sermons.
A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.
Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.
2. In Shakespeare it signifies to fail.
If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die. Shakespeare.
- FLINCHER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.
- TO FLING. preter. flung; part. flung or flong. v. a. [from fligo, Latin, Skinner: according to others from flying; so to fling is to let flying.]
1. To cast from the hand; to throw.
The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as the flings,
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.
2. To dart; to cast with violence.
How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Denham.
3. To scatter.
Ev'ry beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change when'er they wave their wings. Pope.
4. To drive by violence.

FLI

- A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
5. To move forcibly.
The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small com-pacts, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison's Spect.
 6. To eject; to dismiss.
Cromwell, I charge thee fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 7. To cast reproach.
I know thy generous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it;
It straight takes fire. Addison's Cat.
 8. To force into another condition; properly into a worse.
Squalid fortune, into baseness flong,
Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments. Spenser.
 9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.
These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward's Natural History.
 10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.
These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison's Spectator.
 - TO FLING. v. n.
1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.
The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his fence. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.
Their confusions are galled by it, and this makes them
wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson's Sermons.
 2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.
Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 - FLING. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A throw; a cast.
2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.
No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.
I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to show their vices odious. Swift.
 - FLINGER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. He who throws.
2. He who jeers.
 - FLINT. n. f. [plum, Saxon.]
1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invell'd with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Fossils.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Cleaveland.
There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun. South's Sermons.
Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by.
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighb'ring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food. Prior.
 2. Anything eminently or proverbially hard.
Your tears, a heart of flint Might tender make. Spenser.
Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault. Sh. Ant. and Cleop.
 - FLINTY. adj. [from flint.]
1. Made of flint; strong.
Tyrant custom
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shakespeare's Othello.
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.
 2. Full of stones.
The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry. Bacon's Natural History.
 3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.
I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life; which gratitude,
Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
 - FLIPP. n. f. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.
The tar-pawlin and fwabber is lolling at Madagascar, with some drunken sunburnt whore, over a can of flip. Dennis.
 - FLIPPANT. adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flip-flap.]

1. Nimble;

FLI

1. Nimble; moveable. It is used only of the act of speech.
An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble or flippant. Addison.
2. Pert; talkative.
Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.
- FLIPPANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a flowing prating way.
TO FLIRT. v. a. [Skinner thinks it formed from the sound.]
1. To throw any thing with a quick elastic motion.
Dick the scavenger Flirts from his cart the mud in Walpole's face. Swift.
2. To move with quickness.
Permit some happier man
To kiss your hand, or flirt your fan. Dorset.
- TO FLIRT. v. n.
1. To jeer; to gibe at one.
2. To run about perpetually; to be unsteady and fluttering.
- FLIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick elastic motion.
In unfurling the fan are several little flirts and vibrations;
as also gradual and deliberate openings. Addison's Spectator.
Before you pass th' imaginary fights
While the spread fan o'erhades your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.
2. A sudden trick.
Have licence to play,
At the hedge a flirt,
For a fleet or a flirt. Ben. Johnson's Gypsies.
3. A pert young hussey.
Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt gills; I am none of his skains mates. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world. Addison's Guardian, No. 109.
- FLIRTATION. n. f. [from flirt.] A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.
A muffin flounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.
- TO FLIRT. v. n. [from To flirt; or from fitter, Danish, to remove.]
1. To fly away.
Likett it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in Summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spenser.
His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the souls do die of men that live amiss. Fairy Qu.
2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term.
So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to return. Fairy Queen, cant. 7.
It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out one body into some other. Hooker.
3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.
He made a glancing shot, and mis'd the dove;
Yet mis'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird. Dryd. Æn.
Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.
4. To be flux or unstable.
Himself up high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found Her flitting parts, and element unfound. Fairy Queen, b. i.
He stoop'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden's Æn.
- FLIRT. adj. [from flit.] Swift; nimble; quick.
And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were dight,
In poison and in blood, of malice and despatch. Fairy Qu.
- FLITCH. n. f. [placce, Saxon; flycke, Danish; fleche, fleche,
French. Skinner.] The side of a hog salted and cured.
But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare. Dryden's Juv.
While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd. Swift.
He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon. Addison.
- FLITTERMOUSE. n. f. The bat.
- FLITTING. n. f. [plir, Saxon, scandal.] An offence; a fault.
Thou tellest my flittings, put my tears into thy bottle. Psalms lvi.
- FLIX. n. f. [corrupted from flax.] Down; fur; soft hair.
With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey;
His warm breath blows her flix up as the lies;
She trembling creeps upon the ground away,

O FLO

- And looks back to him with beseeching eyes. Dryden.
- FLIXWOOD. n. f. See HEDGE-MUSTARD.
- TO FLOAT. v. n. [flatter, French.]
1. To swim on the surface of the water.
When the sea was calm, all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The ark no more now floats, but seems on ground,
Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd. Milt. P. L.
That men, being drowned and sunk, do float the ninth day, when their gall breaketh, are popular affirmations. Brown.
Three blurring nights, born by the southern blast,
I floated; and discover'd land at last. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
His rosy wreath was dropt not long before,
Born by the tide of wine, and floating on the floor. Dryden.
On frothy billows thousands float the stream,
In cumb'rous mail, with love of farther shore. Phillips.
Carp are very apt to float away with fresh water. Mortimer.- 2. To move without labour in a fluid.
What divine monsters, O ye gods, were these That float in air, and fly upon the seas! Dryd. Ind. Emp.
Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,
Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind. Pope.
- 3. To pass with a light irregular course.
Floating visions make not deep impressions enough to leave in the mind clear, distinct, lasting ideas. Locke.
- TO FLOAT. v. a. To cover with water.
Proud Pactolus floats the fruitful lands,
And leaves a rich manure of golden sands. Dryden's Æn.
Venice looks, at a distance, like a great town half floated by a deluge. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Now smoaks with show'rs the misty mountain-ground,
And floated fields lie undistinguish'd round. Pope's Statius.
The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.
- FLOAT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of flowing; the flux; the contrary to the ebb. A sense now out of use.
Our trust in the Almighty is, that with us contentions are now at their highest float. Hooker, Preface.
Of this kind is some disposition of bodies to rotation, particularly from East to West; of which kind we conceive the main float and refloat of the sea is, which is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon's Nat. History.
- 2. Any body so contrived or formed as to swim upon the water.
They took it for a ship, and, as it came nearer, for a boat;
but it proved a float of weeds and rushes. L'Estrange's Fables.
A passage for the weary people make;
With o'er floats the standing water throw,
Of mally stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden's Virgil.
- 3. The cork or quill by which the angler discovers the bite of a fish.
You will find this to be a very choice bait, sometimes casting a little of it into the place where your float swims. Walt. n.
- 4. A cant word for a level.
Banks are measured by the float or floor, which is eighteen foot square, and one deep. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- FLOATY. adj. Buoyant and swimming a-top.
The hindrance to stay well is the extreme length of a ship, especially if she be floaty, and want sharpnels of way forwards. Raleigh's Essays.
- FLOCK. n. f. [placce, Saxon.]
1. A company; usually a company of birds or beasts.
She that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will the love when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
- 2. A company of sheep, distinguished from herds, which are of oxen.
The cattle in the fields, and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary; these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.
France has a sheep by her, not only as a sacrifice, but to shew that the riches of the country consisted chiefly in flocks and pasturage. Addison on ancient Medals.
- 3. A body of men.
The heathen that had fled out of Judea came to Nicanor by flocks. 2 Mac. xiv. 14.
- 4. [From flaccus.] A lock of wool.
A house well furnish'd shall be thine to keep;
And, for a flock bed, I can cheer my sheep. Dryden.
- TO FLOCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather in crowds or large numbers.
Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet
the time carelessly. Shakespeare's As you like it.
Upon the return of the ambassadors, the poor of all sorts flocked together to the great master's house. Knolles's History.
Others ran flocking out of their houses to the general supplication. 2 Mac. iii. 18.
Stilpo, when the people flocked about him, and that one said, The people come wondering about you, as if it were to see

see some strange beast; no, faith he, it is to see a man which Diogenes fought with his lantern at noon-day. Bacon.
Seeing the spirits swelling the nerves cause the arm's motion, upon its resistance they flock from other parts of the body to overcome it. Digby on Bodies.

The wits of the town came thither;
'Twas strange to see how they flock'd together;
Each strongly confident of his own way,
Thought to gain the laurel that day. Suckling.
Friends daily flock. Dryden's Æn.

The Trojan youth about the captive flock,
To wonder, or to pity, or to mock. Denham.
People do not flock to courts so much for their majesties service, as for making their fortunes. L'Estrange.
To FLOG. v. a. [from flagrum, Latin.] To lash; to whip; to chastise. Swift.

The schoolmaster's joy is to flog. Swift.
FLOG. particip. passive, from To flog, used by Spenser. See FLING.

FLOOD. n. f. [flood, Saxon; flot, French.]

1. A body of water; the sea; a river.
What need the bridge much broader than the flood? Shak.
His dominion shall be also from the one sea to the other, and from the flood unto the world's end. Psalms lxxii. 8.

Or thence from Niger flood to Atlas mount,
The kingdoms of Almanzor, Fez, and Sus, Morocco, and Algiers, and Tremisen. Milton's Par. Lost.
All dwellings else

Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp
Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Arcadia's flow'ry plains and pleasing floods. Dryden's Virg.

2. A deluge; an inundation.

When went there by an age since the great flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man? Shaksp.
You see this confluence, this great flood of visiters. Shak.
By sudden floods, and fall of waters,
Buckingham's army is dispers'd and scatter'd. Shak. R. III.

3. Flow; flux; not ebb; not reflux; the swelling of a river by rain or inland flood.

We seek to know the moving of each sphere,
And the strange cause o' th' ebbs and floods of Nile. Davies.

4. Catamenia.

Those that have the good fortune of miscarriage, or being delivered, escape by means of their floods revelling the humours from their lungs. Harvey on Conceptions.

To FLOOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To deluge; to cover with waters.

Where meadows are flooded late in Spring, roll them with a large barley-roller. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLOODGATE. n. f. [flood and gate.] Gate or shutter by which the watercourse is closed or opened at pleasure.

As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmane had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sunk to the ground. Sidney.

Yet there the steel staid not; but inly bate

Deep in his flesh, and opened wide a red floodgate. Fai. Qu.

His youth, and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluices and floodgates of popular liberty were yet set open. Watson.

The rain descended for forty days, the cataracts or floodgates of heaven being opened. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

FLOOK. n. f. [flook, a plow, German.] The broad part of the anchor which takes hold of the ground.

FLOOR. n. f. [flop, flope, Saxon.]

1. The pavement: a pavement is always of stone, the floor of wood or stone; the part on which one treads.

His stepmother, making all her gestures counterfeit affection, lay almost groveling upon the floor of her chamber. Sidney.

He rent that iron door

With furious force, and indignation fell;
Where entered in, his foot could find no floor,
But all a deep descent as dark as hell. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Look how the floor of heav'n

Is thick inlay'd with patens of bright gold:
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young ey'd cherubims. Shakspere.

The ground lay strewn with pikes so thick as a floor is usually strewn with rushes. Hayward.

He winnoweth barley to-night in the threshing floor. Ruth.

2. A story; a flight of rooms.

He that building stays at one

Floor, or the second, hath erected none. Johnson's Catiline.

Six flouncing Flanders mares
Are e'en as good as any two of theirs. Prior.

3. To move with passionate agitation.

When I'm duller than a post,
Nor can the plainest word pronounce,
You neither fume, nor fret, nor flounce. Swift.

To FLOUNCE. v. a. To deck with flounces.

She was flounced and furbelowed from head to foot; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl. Addison's Spectator, No. 129.

They have got into the fashion of flouncing the petticoat so very deep, that it looks like an entire coat of lutestring. Pope.

FLOUNCE. n. f. [from the verb.] Any thing sewed to the garment, and hanging loose, so as to swell and shake.

Nay, oft in dreams invention we bestow,
To change a flounce, or add a furbelow. Pope.

A muslin flounce, made very full, would be very agreeable. Pope.

FLOUNDER. n. f. [floyder, Danish; fluke, Scottish.] The name of a small flat fish.

Like the flounder, out of the frying-pan into the fire. Camd.

Flounders will both thrive and breed in any pond. Mortimer.

To FLOUNDER. v. n. [from flounce.] To struggle with violent and irregular motions: as a horse in the mire.

Down goes at once the horseman and the horse;
That courser stumbles on the fallen steed,
And flound'ring throws the rider o'er his head. Dryden.

The

FLO

The more inform'd, the less he understood,
And deeper funk by flound'ring in the mud. Dryden.

He champs the bit, impatient of his loss,
And starts aside, and flounders at the cross. Dryden.

He plung'd for sense, but found no bottom there;
Then writ and flound'ring on, in mere despair. Pope's Dunci.

To FLOURISH. v. n. [floreo, floresco, Latin.]

1. To be in vigour; not to fade.

The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree. Pf. xcii. 12.
Where e'er you tread, the blushing flow'r's shall rise,
And all things flourish where you turn your eyes. Pope.

2. To be in a prosperous state.

If I could find example

Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: but since Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Harry, that prophesied thou should'st be king,
Doth comfort thee in sleep; live thou and flourish. Shaksp.

They dilate sometimes, and flourish long upon little incidents, and they skip over and but lightly touch the drier part of their theme. Watts's Logick.

4. To describe various figures by intersecting lines; to play in wanton and irregular motions.

Impetuous spread

The stream and smokings, flourish'd o'er his head. Pope.

4. To move any thing in quick circles or vibrations by way of show or triumph.

And all the powers of hell in full applause
Flourish'd their snakes, and tosd'd their flaming brands. Cra.

Against the post their wicker shields they crush, Flourish the sword, and at the plastron push. Dryden's Juv.

5. To adorn with embellishments of language; to grace with eloquence ostentatiously diffusive.

We should add the labours of Hercules, though flourish'd with much fabulous matter; yet it doth notably set forth the content of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters and tyrants. Bacon.

6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.

To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

FLOURISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Bravery; beauty.

I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was. Shaksp. Richard III.

The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth. Crashaw.

2. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables. Bacon.

We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 5.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out.

More's Divine Dialogues.

Villanies have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetoric interposed between the sight and the object. L'Estr.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, tho' least believed by them. South's Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;
He lards with flourish his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say it thou; what to be prais'd, and hang? Dryd.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat cha-rafters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.

FLOURISHER. n. f. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flow'r;

For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r. Chapman's Iliads.

To FLOUT. v. a. [fluyten, Dutch; flouten, Frisick.] To mock; to insult; to treat with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency. Shakspere.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakspere's Macbeth.

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;
Certainly he flouted us downright. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

She rail'd at her, that she should be so immodest to write to one she knew would flout her. Shakspere.

Phyllida flouts me. Walton's Angler.

To FLOUT. v. n. To practise mockery; to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument? Shaksp.

With talents well endu'd

To be scurrilous and rude;
When you perty raise your snout,
Fleece and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

FLOUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A mock; an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table,
Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,
With many a smile and leering flout. Hudibras, p. iii.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without. Dryden.

How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup? Calamy's Sermon.

FLOUTER. n. f. [from flout.] One who jeers.

To FLOW. v. n. [flop, Saxon.]

1. To run or spread as water.

The god am I, whose yellow water flows Around these fields, and fattens as it goes. Dryden's Æn.

Fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

Endless tears flow down in streams. Swift.

2. To run; to opposed to standing waters.

With other floats the standing water flow;
Of massy stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

3. To melt.

Oh that thou wouldst rent the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence. If. lxiv. 1.

4. To proceed; to issue.

I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from't,
I shall do good. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse. South.

5. To glide smoothly without asperity: as, a flowing period.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence. Hakewill on Providence.

6. To write smoothly; to speak volubly.

Virgil is sweet and flowing in his hexameters. Dryden.

Did sweeter sounds adorn my flowing tongue
Than ever man pronounc'd, or angel sung. Prior.

7. To abound; to be crowded.

The dry streets flow'd with men. Chapman.

8. To be copious; to be full.

Then shall our names,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shak. Hen. V.

There ev'ry eye with slumb'rous chains the bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblet to the ground. Pope's Odyssey.

9. To hang loose and waving.

He was clothed in a flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers. Spectator, No. 425.

To FLOW. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.

In a hot dry Summer watering would be a very great advantage to hops; but it is scarce practicable, unless you have a stream at hand to flow the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Flow. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flows and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow,
We as arts elements shall understand. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLOWER. n. f. [fleur, French; flor, floris, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petals, a stamen, apex and style; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller ones, and which usually have but one single style; and compounded, which consist of many florets, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one intire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petals, or leaves; as in borage, bugloss, &c. or polypetalous, which have distinct petals, and those falling off singly, and not all together, as the seeming petals of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage, deadnettle, &c. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the aristochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcissus, &c. but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and so represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cucullate, and galeculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes also the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as in the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are either, first, discous or discoidal; that is, whose florets are set together so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which therefore, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petals standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched uneven and jagged, as the hieracia, &c. 3d, fistular, which is compounded of many long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jagged at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petals, are called stamincous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

With flow'r inwoven tresses torn,
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.

Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead?
Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill on Providence.

Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:
In flow'r of age you perish for a fong. Pope's Horace Impr.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser on Ireland.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FLO

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next these in worth, and firm these urns be seal'd;
Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour. Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hooker.

Thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects; the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy; but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

FLOWER DE LUCE. n. f. A bulbous iris.

It hath a lily flower of one leaf, shaped like that of the common iris: the point has three leaves, and the emblement turns to a fruit shaped like that of the common iris. Its root is bulbous. Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The iris is the flower de luce. Peachment.

TO FLOWER. v. n. [florir, French, or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly fort,
To take the foliage of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Fairy Queen.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flowering garland crown'd. Fairy Queen.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd, Op'ning their various colours. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Mark well the flowering almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryden's Georg.

To leafless shrubs the flowering palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope's Messiah.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser's Pastoral.

This cause detain'd me all my flowering youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon's Natural History, No. 385.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flower'd off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton on Education.

TO FLOWER. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers.

FLOW'ERAGE. n. f. [from flower.] Store of flowers. Di.

FLOW'ERET. n. f. [fleur, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would aguish
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Fairy Queen.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flow'rets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile pacer. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shakespeare.

So to the sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milton's Par. Lost.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unolid are the leaves. Dryden's Fables.

FLOW'ERGARDEN. n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLOW'ERINESS. n. f. [from flower.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers.

2. Floridness

FLU

2. Floridness of speech.

FLOW'ERINGBUSH. n. f. A plant.

The leaves are triangular and grassy, the stalks naked, and the flowers disposed in an umbella upon the top of the stalk, each consisting of six leaves: three of them are large, and three small, which are expanded in form of a rose. Miller.

FLOW'ERY. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

My mother Circe, with the syrens three,
Amidst the flow'ry kirtl'd Naiades. Milton.

Day's harbinger
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw. Pope's Odyssey.

The streams and fountains, no delight could yield. Pope.

FLOW'INGLY. adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance.

FLOW. n. f. [flake, Scott.] A flounder; the name of a fish.

Amongst these the flounder, sole, and plaice follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FLOW'RWORT. n. f. The name of a plant.

FLOWN. Participle of fly, or flew, they being confounded.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton's P. L.

FLUCTUANT. adj. [fluctuans, Latin.] Wavering; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion? LeStrange.

TO FLUCTUATE. v. n. [fluere, Latin.]

1. To roll to and again as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors how'ring there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter
New part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd, Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto on an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison's Spectator, No. 549.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUATION. n. f. [fluctuatio, Latin; fluctuation, French, from fluctuate.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interagency irregulars.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be ealed of it by any thing but error.

FLUE. n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flew of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUE'LIN. n. f. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLUENCY. n. f. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

Th' unthinking victors vainly boast their pow'rs;
Be their the musket, while the tongue is our's!
We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickell.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift's Thoughts on various Subjects.

FLU

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
Behold him tost on seas. Sandys's Paraphrase on Job.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

FLUENT. adj. [fluens, Latin.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupified. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being absolutely independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must necessarily continue to do so the next. Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance. Denham's Sophy.

FLUENT. n. f. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that sed'ulous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress,
Ev'n in the sight of death. Phillips.

FLUID. adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud, Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milton's P. Lost.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opt.

FLUID. n. f. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

FLUIDITY. n. f. [fluiditas, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to solidity; want of adherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton's Opt.

A disease opposite to this spiffitude is too great fluidity. Arb.

FLUIDNESS. n. f. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLUMMERY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheateflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

FLUNG. participle and preterite of fling. Thrown; cast.

Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.
8. To break; to shiver.
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A fair example to his master gave;
He bafas heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.
9. [Saxon; fliehan, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. [In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded.]
Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.
Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zech. xiv. 5.
Abiathar escaped, and fled after David. 1 Sa. xxii. 20.
What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryden.
He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.
I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forfake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.
10. To fly in the face. To insult.
This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
11. To act in defiance.
Fly in nature's face:
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt, and flying off. Shakespeare. King Lear.
The traitor Syphax
Flew off at once with his Numidian horse. Addison's Cato.
13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.
How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks. Ben. John's Catil.
Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier of Friendship.
14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.
You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryden.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but in times of war, when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent.
Dryden's Medal, Dedicat.
15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.
All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.

His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who fail'd in air. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
4. To attack by a bird of prey.
If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.
5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape;
flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded.
FLY. n. f. [pleoge, Saxon.]
1. A small winged insect of many species.
As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.
My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.
To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the seed. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To heedless flies the window proves
A constant death. Thomson's Summer.

FOLK. n. f. [polc, Saxon; volk, Dutch.]

1. People, in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolorous discourses of their own and other folks misfortune. Sidney.

Dorilaus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy soever the children after grow, with a son. Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hudibras, p. 1.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Psalms lvi. 4.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folk, time's dotting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before. Shakespeare.

Anger is a kind of baseness; as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks. Bacon's Essay.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the tree has seen,
And goes with folks to shew the fight. Swift.

He walk'd, and wore a threadbare cloak;
He din'd and sup'd at charge of other folk. Swift.

FOLKMOSE. n. f. [from folk and moose.]

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folkmoose, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk. Spenser on Ireland.

FOLLICLE. n. f. [folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 1.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying the seed-vessels, capsulae, feminals, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicularis, &c. Quincy.

TO FOLLOW. v. a. [folgian, Saxon; volgen, Dutch.]

1. To go after; not before or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. To pursue as an enemy.

Wherever guilt can fly, revenge can follow. Irene.

3. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle.
Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion, 1 Sa. xvii. 13.

FOL

That in the nature of their lords rebels:
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shak. K. Lear.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway,
Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

4. To pursue.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney, b. ii.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,
And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade. Dryden's En.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.

5. To succeed in order of time.

6. To be consequential, as effects to causes.

7. To imitate; to copy.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancienter and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker, b. v. f. 28.

Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke on Education.

8. To obey; to observe.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians. Tillotson, Preface.

Most men admire
Virtue, who follow not her lore. Paradise Regain'd, b. vii.

9. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.

10. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits. Ecclus. xxix. 9.

TO FOLLOW. v. n.

1. To come after another.

Peter followed afar off. Luke xxii. 54.

The famine shall follow close after you. Jer. xlii. 16.

Welcome all that lead or follow
To the oracle of Apollo. Ben. Johnson.

2. To be posterior in time.

3. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness misleads him, the mis-carriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

4. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

This dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

5. To continue endeavours.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hos.

FOLLOWER. n. f. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader: whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,
Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. A dependant.

3. An attendant.

No follower, but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can't thou tell that?
—With Pains, and other his continual followers. Sh. H. IV.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto them too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South's Sermons.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden's En.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copy; one of the same sort.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Cor. xi. 1.

The true profession of Christianity invariably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Spratt's Sermons.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.

The studious head or gen'rous mind,
Follow'r of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or patriot, rose but to restore
The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope's Essay.

FOLLY.

FON

FOLLY. n. f. [folie, French.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

Think't thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare, King Lear.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakespeare.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope's Horace.

TO FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomentor, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton's P. L.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbutnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Watson.

Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTATION. n. f. [fomentation, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and disperse obstructed humours. Quincy.

Fomentation calteth forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions of fomentations by the nurses. Arbutnot on Coins.

FOMENTER. n. f. [from foment.] An encourager; a supporter

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up in Druiua. Havel.

FON. n. f. [Scott. A word now obsolete.] A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
That loves the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser's Past.

FOND. n. f. [fann, Scottish. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fenne is in Obauer to doat, to be foolish.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.

This we know that the Grecians or Gentiles did account foolishness; but that they ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond school-master. Alcham.

Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to wall inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakespeare's Timon.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shakespeare.

Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. Davies.

Thou see'st
How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. Milt. Paradise Lost.

So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves 't invite. Milton's Agonistes.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those ass's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy with. Waller.

But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinities. Dryden's Tyrann. Love.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tillotson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.

Not with fond thickles of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.

Every kind of fond wife.
Like Venus I'll shine. Addison.

Be fond and be fine. Addison.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted.

FONDLY.

FON

Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero; who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

1. Fond of my well-chosen seat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.

Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts's Improvem. of the Mind.

TO FOND. } v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with great indulgence; to care for; to dote.

TO FONDLE. } Indulgence; to care for; to dote.

How'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fond it as the froward child of love. Dryden's Aeneas.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fond's thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse thy venom in her veins. Dryden's En.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Gulliver's Travels.

TO FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love; to dote on.

How will this sadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakespeare.

FONDLY. n. f. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FONDLING. n. f. [from fondle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. Locke.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed mis to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Bred a fondling and an heirless,
Drest like any lady may'refs;
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

FONDLY. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Shak. H. IV.

Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantick man. Shakespeare, R. II.

Ficinus fondly adviseth, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood to be sucked. Bacon's Natural History.

The military mound
The British files transcend, in evil hour
For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd their fate. Phillips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope's Criticism.

Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Ardelia's eyes. Swift.

2. With great or extreme tenderness.

Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd:
Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the sylph in twain. Pope.

Fondly or severely kind. Savage.

FONDNESS. n. f. [from fond.]

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense; want of judgment.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden be. Spenser's Sonnets.

2. Foolish tenderness.

But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds. Addison, Cato.

Hopeless mother!
Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring
To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.

3. Tender passion.

Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness. A. Phill. Dist. Moth.

Corinna, with that youthful air,
Is thirty and a bit to spare:
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl. Swift.

4. Unreasonable liking.

They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and meet fruits of this change. Hammond's Fundamentals.

FONT. n. f. [font, Latin; fonte, French.] A stone vessel in which the water for holy baptism is contained in the church.

The presenting of infants at the holy font is by their god-fathers. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

A person plethorick, subject to hot defluxions, was advised to a fontanel in her arm. Wifeman of Infammation.
FO'NTANGE. n. f. [from the name of the first wearer.] A knot of ribbons on the top of the head-dress. Out of use.
These old fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head: they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of crape, which were fringed, and hung down their backs. Addis.
FOOD. n. f. [fraban, Sax. voeden, Dut. to feed; feed, Scott.]
1. Victuals; provision for the mouth.
On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food. Shakesp. Much food is in the tillage of the poor. Prov. xiii. 23.
Under whose lowly roof thou halt vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;
Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
As that more willingly thou couldst not seem
At heav'n's high feasts to have fed. Milton's Paradise Lost.
They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
And wax that does the absent sun supply. Waller.
2. Any thing that nourishes.
Give me some musick: musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
O dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd lay, I had eyes again. Shakesp. King Lear.
FOODFUL. adj. [food and full.] Fruitful; full of food; plentiful.
There Titius was to see, who took his birth
From heav'n, his nursing from the foodful earth. Dryden.

4. One who counterfeits folly; a buffoon; a jester.
Where's my knave, my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither. Shakesp. King Lear.
I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool or jester. Milt.
If this disguise fit not naturally on to grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.
5. To play the fool. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.
Returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney.
6. To play the fool. To act like one void of common understanding.
Well, thus we play the fools with the time,
And the spirits of the wife fit in the clouds
And mock us. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.
Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.
7. To make a fool. To disappoint; to defeat.
'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
To fool. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy; to play; to idle; to sport.
I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still. Shakesp. Tempest.
Fool not; for all may have, Herbert.
If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave
If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.
It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L'Estrange.
He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling.
—Is this a time for fooling? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
To fool. v. a.
1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint; to frustrate; to defeat.
2. To treat with contempt; to disappoint; to frustrate; to defeat.

FOO

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shoo'd off? Shak. H. IV.
If it be you that stir these daughters hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much To bear it tamely. Shakesp. King Lear.
When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lackest a cause:
This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray. Ben. Johnson.
Him over-weening
To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,
Fool'd and beguiled. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
If men loved to be deceived and fooled about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart. South's Sermon.
When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit.
I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.
I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fooled and imposed upon. Addison's Freeholder, No. 7.
2. To infatuate.
It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it. Denham's Sophy.
A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures: I will no longer be fooled or imposed upon by them. Calamy's Sermon.
A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty. Temple.
3. To cheat; as, to fool one of his money.
FOOL'BORN. adj. [fool and born.] Foolish from the birth.
Reply not to me with a foolborn jest. Shakesp. Henry IV.
FOOL'ERY. n. f. [from fool.]
1. Habitual folly.
Folly, fir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, fir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. Shak. Twelfth Night.
2. An act of folly; trifling practice.
It is mere foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Watts.
3. Object of folly.
That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected. Raleigh's History.
We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. L'Estrange's Fables.
FOOL'ERY. adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.
As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,
That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail;
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
At perils past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his foolhappy oversight. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.
FOOLHARDINESS. n. f. [from foolhardy.] Mad rashness; courage without sense.
A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly. South's Sermon.
There is a difference betwixt daring and foolhardiness: Lucan and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
FOOLHARDISE. n. f. [fool and hardieffe, French.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.
More huge in strength than wife in works he was,
And reason with foolhardise over-ran;
Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brags. F. 2.
FOOLHARDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgment; madly adventurous; foolishly bold.
One mother, when as her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talons play,
Half dead through fear, her little babe reviv'd. Fairy Queen.
Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet-council of God Almighty than the angels. Hawth.
If any yet be so foolhardy,
T' expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a maim. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.
FOOLTRAP. n. f. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in: as a flytrap.
Betts, at the first, were fooltraps, where the wife
Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.
FOOLISH. adj. [from fool.]
1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.
Thou foolish woman, feelest thou not our mourning? L'Estrange, Fable 74.
He, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead. Dryden.
9. State; character; condition.
See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before. Dryden's En.
In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow subjects in England. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them? Addis.
10. Scheme; plan; settlement.
There is no wellwither to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot. Swift.
I ask, whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late king James, a king of England may be deposed? Swift.
11. A state of incipient existence.
If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.
12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.
Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot. Bacon's Essays.

FOO

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.
Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame. Ajcham's Schoolmaster.
Didst thou hear these verses?
—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear. Shakesp. 14. Motion; action.
While other jests are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with slender to marry. Shakesp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable. Grew.
15. A measure containing twelve inches.
When it signifies measure it has often, but vitiously, foot in the plural.
An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linnen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten. Bacon.

You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shakesp. 2. To settle; to begin to fix.
What confederacy have you with the traitors Late footed in the kingdom? Shakesp. King Lear.
3. To tread.
Saint Withold footed thrice the wold:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shak. K. Lear.
There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they featly foot the green. Tickell.
FOOTBALL. n. f. [foot and ball.] A ball commonly made of a blown bladder cased with leather, driven by the foot.
Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shakesp. 4. A Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice.
As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest. Waller.
One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.
He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scribb.
FOOTBOY. n. f. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy
At chamber-door? Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Though I had no body to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things. Boyle on Colours.
Whenever he imagines advantage will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.

- FOO'THOLD. n. f. [foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.
- So they all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.
- He's never well 'till he's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down by. L'Estrange, Fable 6.
- FOO'TING. n. f. [from foot.]
1. Ground for the foot.
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and advent'rous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear. Shakesf. Henry IV.
As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing found, for all the flood. Davies.
In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 2. Foundation; basis; support; root.
Cloven flakes; and, wondrous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race. Dr. d. Virg. Georg.
All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind fits not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered. Locke.
The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original. Locke.
 3. Place.
Whether they unctuous exhalations are,
Fir'd by the fun, or seeming so alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shewn. Dryden.
 4. Tread; walk.
I would outright you did no body come:
But hark, I hear the footing of a man. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
Break off, break off; I feel the different sound
Of some chaste footing near about this ground:
Run to your throuds, within these brakes and trees;
Our number may affright. Milton.
 5. Dance.
Make holyday: your rye-fraw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 6. Steps; road; track.
He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser on Ireland.

Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Roscommon.
- The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat.
- In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.
- FO'PDOODLE. n. f. [fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.
- Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras, p. ii.
- FO'PPERV. n. f. [from fop.]
1. Folly; impertinence.
Let not the found of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakesf. Merry Wives of Windsor.
This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the pursuits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shakesf. King Lear.
 2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.
 3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.
They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in. Stillingfleet.
But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tune, and mode of dance,
Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense. Granville.
I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.
- FO'PPISH. adj. [from fop.]
1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools

FOR

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooker, b. v. f. 47.
Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.
Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length. Shakesf.
For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
An astrologer faith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment. Bacon.
For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon's War with Spain.
The governor, falling out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Kneller's History of the Turks.
Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victual. Kneller.
Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her. Suckling.
Care not for frowns or smiles. Denham's Sophy, Prol.
The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wicked for hoping. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God; and leave the success to him. Taylor.
Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, were them so low that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them. Ray on the Creation.
I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suffering death for this ungrateful maid. Dryden.
Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.
For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne. Dryden.
Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryd. Virg. Geo.
I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden's Aurengze.
Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shrick'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.
Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers. Locke.
A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for any thing else. Locke.
The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addis.
My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.
Which best or worst, you could not think;
And die you must, for want of drink. Prior.
It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt. Swift.
We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have to many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us. Swift.
Your sermons would be less valuable, for want of time. Swift.
 2. With respect to; with regard to.

FOR

- Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- A paltry ring
That she did give me, whose poetry was,
For all the world, like cutlers poetry
Upon a knife; love me and leave me not. Shakespeare.
For all the world,
As thou art at this hour, was Richard then. Shakesf. H. IV.
It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon, Essay 21.
Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politick. Bacon's Essays.
Comets are rather gazed upon, than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon, Essay 54.
For me, if there be such a thing as I.
He saith these honours consisted in preferring their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it. Stillingfleet.
Our laws were for their matter foreign. Hales.
Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; for there being no other laws in China but the king's command. Temple.
For me, no other happiness I own,
Than to have born no issue to the throne. Dryd. Tyr. Love.
For me, my stormy voyage at an end,
I to the port of death securely tend. Dryden's Æn. b. xii.
After death, we spirits have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures. Dryden.
Such little waifs, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong. Tate's Juv.
Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually lops them. Pope's Preface to the Liad.
Lo, some are vellow, and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood. Pope.
In this sense it has often as before it.
As for Maramaldus the general, they had no just cause to dislike him, being an old captain of great experience. Kneller.- 4. In the character of.
If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.
She thinks you favour'd:
But let her go, for an ungrateful woman. A. Phillips.
Say, is it fitting in this very field,
This field, where from my youth I've been a carter,
I, in this field, should die for a deserter? Gay.
- 5. With resemblance of.
I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd. Paradise Regain'd.
The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And, bounding, o'er the postmell cast the knight:
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.
- 6. Considered as; in the place of.
Our present lot appears
For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton's Pa. Lost.
The council-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.
Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For those our critics much confide in;
Though merely writ at first for filling,
To raise the volume's price a shilling. Swift.
- 7. In advantage of; for the sake of.
An ant is a wife creature for itself; but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard. Bacon's Essay 24.
He refused not to die for those that killed him, and shed his blood for some of those that spilt it. Boyle.
Whether some hero's fate,
In words worth dying for, he celebrate. Cowley.
Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,
Not for protection, but to be devour'd? Dryd. Span. Fryar.
- 8. Conducive to; beneficial to.
It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for mens health to be temperate. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

For talks with Indian elephants he strove,
And Jove's own thunder from his mouth he drove. Dryden.
11. In proportion to.
As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy. Bacon's Henry VII.
Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason. Tillotson, Sermon 4.
12. With appropriation to.
Shadow will serve for Summer: prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book. Shakef. H. IV.
13. After O an expression of desire.
O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shak. H. V. Prel. que.
14. In account of; in solution of.
Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
15. Inducing to as a motive.
There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice. Till.
16. In expectation of.
He must be back again by one and twenty, to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion, nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with. Locke.
17. Noting dependence.
For a holy person to be humble, for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors. Taylor.
18. Noting dependence.
The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle on Colours.
19. In prevention of; for fear of.
Corn being had down, any way ye allow,
Should wither as needeth for burning in mow. Tuff. Husb.
And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befel me on a day.
In this self place. Shakepeare's Henry VI. p. iii.
There must be no alleys with hedges at the either end, for letting your prospect upon this fair hedge from the green; nor at the farther end, for letting your prospect from the hedge through the arches upon the heath. Bacon, Essay 47.
20. In remedy of.
Sometimes hot, sometimes cold things are good for the toothach. Garretson.

To make him copious is to alter his character; and to translate him line for line, is impossible. Dryden.
We take a falling meteor for a star. Cowley.
23. In supply of; to serve in the place of.
Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, adore him, and imitate him, as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.
24. Through a certain duration.
Some please for once, some will for ever please. Roscom.
Those who sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy, without their knowing it. Locke.
The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Since, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing
Successive conquests, and a glorious king;
And bring him laurels, whatso'er they cost. Prior.
The youth transported, asks without delay
To guide the sun's bright chariot for a day. Garth's Ovid.
25. In search of; in quest of.
Some of the philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men.
Tillotson, Sermon 5.
26. According to.
Chymists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known,
by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony. Boyle.
27. Noting a state of fitness or readiness.
Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. Shakepeare.
If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke. Dryden.
28. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.
How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,
Have broke their sleeps with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry: for this, engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakef. H. IV.
The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon

FOR

- which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks. Bacon.
- For he writes not for money, not for praise,
Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays. Denham.
There we shall see, a light worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us. Boyle.
He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
- Even death's become to me no dreadful name;
In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,
I saw him, and condemn'd him first for you. Dryd. Aureng.
For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,
And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart. Dryd. Virg.
Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain. Dryden.
Let them, who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their words like mine for noble ends. Dryd. Aureng.
Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use. Fulton.
29. Of tendency to; towards.
It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning of it by force. Kneller.
The kettle to the top was hoist;
But with the upside down, to show
Its inclination for below. Swift.
30. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.
Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive. Hooker, Preface.
It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one. Dryden.
Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife. Dryden.
He for the world was made, not us alone. Cowley.
They must be void of all zeal for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him. Smalridge's Sermon.
Aristotle is for poetical justice. Dennis.
They are all for rank and foul feeding. Fulton.
31. Noting accommodation or adaptation.
Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,
Spies that I bear so well her tyranny,
That she thinks nothing else to fit for me. Domine.
A few rules of logic are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement. Locke.
It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God.
Tillotson, Sermon 4.
- His country has good havens, both for the Adriatic and Mediterranean. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Persia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land. Arbutnot on Cairns.
32. With intention of.
And by that justice hast remov'd the cause
Of those rude tempests, which, for rapine sent,
Too oft, alas, involv'd the innocent. Waller.
Here huntmen with delight may read
How to chuse dogs for scent or speed. Waller.
God hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
For this, from Trivia's temple and her wood,
Are courtesiers driv'n, who shed their matters blood. Dryden.
Such examples should be set before them, as patterns for their daily imitation. Locke.
The next question usually is, what is it for?
Achilles is for revenging himself upon Agamemnon, by means of Hector. Pope's View of Epick Poem.
33. Becoming; belonging to.
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts. Shakepeare's Othello.
Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.
Jests for Dutchmen and English boys.
Is it for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthorized by my supreme command! Dryd. Virg. Æn.
His fire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities. Dryden's Æn.
It is a reasonable account for any man to give, why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do, and perish with them. Tillotson.
34. Notwithstanding.
This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philo Judeus expresseth. Hooker, b. v.
God's desertion shall, for ought he knows the next minute, supervene. De. ay of Pity.
Probability supposes that a thing may, or may not be so,
for any thing that yet is certainly determined on either side.
South's Sermons.
For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Bentley.

FOR

35. For all. Notwithstanding.
Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize. Sidney.
For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Kneller's History.
But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did show the footing found for all the flood. Davies.
They resolute, for all this, do proceed Unto that judgment. Daniel.
For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.
If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home. Stillingfleet.
I thought that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle on Colours.
She might have pass'd over all such petty business; but the raising of my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pernels. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
36. To the use of; to be used in.
The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill. Spenser.
37. In consequence of.
For love they force through thickets of the wood,
They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood. Dryden.
38. In recompense of.
Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden's Pers.
First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught. Dryd. Virg.
39. In proportion to.
He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall. Shakepeare.
Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge. Dryden's Juven. Sat. 13.
40. By means of; by interposition of.
Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God? Tillotson's Sermons.
41. In regard of; in preservation of. I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.
I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart. Shakepeare.
I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pass'd upon the walls. Addison's Spect.
42. For to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you: in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.
Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong? Fairy Queen.
A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser.
These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.
1. The word by which the reason is given of something advanced before.
Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.
Tell me what kind of thing is wit?
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.
Thus does he who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living hand. Tillotson.
2. Because; on this account that.
I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.
Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakepeare's Othello.
Heaven defend your good souls, that you think

FOR

- I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shakepeare's Othello.
Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.
Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon's Natural History.
3. For as much. In regard that; in consideration of.
For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker, b. v.
For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbutnot on Diet.
4. For why. Because; for this reason that.
Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces, that a camel might well carry one of them, being taken from the carriage; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor unto battle, had brought no greater pieces of battery with him. Kneller.
- To FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin.]
1. To wander far; to rove at a distance.
Forage, and run
To meet disfigure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh. Shak. K. John.
2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.
As in a stormy night,
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.
There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad to forage for them. L'Estrange's Fables.
Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd, or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their warring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryden's Virgil.
3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.
His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility. Shakef. Henry V.
To FORAGE v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.
They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land. Spenser on Ireland.
- FORAGE. n. s. [fourages, German and French, from foris, Latin.]
1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.
One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes, and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
2. Provisions fought abroad.
Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden's Georg.
3. Provisions in general.
Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd. Dryd. Fables.
- FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.
Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the found, will deaden it; but in the passage of the found they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Nat. History.
- To FORBEAR v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbore; part.
forborn. [from for, Saxon. for has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or depravation; as forfever, and other powers not easily explained.]
1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.
The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.
2. To pause; to delay.
I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakef.
3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.
He forbore to go forth. 1 Sa. xxiii. 13.
At this he started, and forbore to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden's Juv.
Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.
4. To refrain any violence of temper; to be patient.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison's Cato.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addison.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts.

Swift on the Sacramental Test.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which to griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, plantum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold in their ill-natur'd land Induce. Phillips.

FOREIGNER. n. f. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So more a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sephy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong a friend, a kinsman, and a son:
Refuse your ancient care. Dryd. Æn.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners. Addison's Freeholder.

FOR

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FOREIGNNESS. n. f. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to let me right. Locke.

To FOREIMAGINE. v. a. [fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf. Camden's Remains.

To FOREJUDGE. v. a. [fore and judge.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessed.

To FOREKNOW. v. a. [fore and know.] To have precience of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the Spring shall come; after the Spring, Summer and harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Raleigh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 10.

Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view
Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew. Dryden's Iliad.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe. Dryden.

FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances. More's Divine Dialogues.

FOREKNOWLEDGE. n. f. [fore and knowledge.] Precience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.

I told him you was asleep: he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chuses to speak with you. Shakespeare.

If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown. Milton.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters. Pope.

FORELAND. n. f. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skilful steerer wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sails. Milt. P. L.

To FORELAY. v. a. [fore and lay.] To lay wait for; to intrap by ambush.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake. Dryden.

To FORELIFT. v. a. [fore and lift.] To raise aloft any anterior part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Fairy Queen, b. i.

FORELOCK. n. f. [fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forehead of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be staid,
Unless she do him by the forelock take. Spenser, Sonnet 70.

Hyacinthine locks
Round from his parted forelock manly hung, Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad. Milton.

Zeal and duty are not slow,
But on occasion's forelock watchful wait. Milt. Parad. Reg.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it. Swift.

FOREMAN. n. f. [fore and man.] The first or chief person.

He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury. Addison's Spectator.

FOREMENTIONED. adj. [fore and mentioned.] Mentioned or recited before. It is observable that many participles are compounded with fore, whose verbs have no such composition.

Dacier, in the life of Aurelius, has not taken notice of the forementioned figure on the pillar. Addison on Italy.

FOREMOST. adj. [from fore.]

1. First in place.

Our women in the foremost ranks appear;
March to the fight, and meet your mistresses there. Dryden.

I stand astonish'd! what, the bold Sempronius,
That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,
As with a hurricane of zeal transported,
And virtuous ev'n to madness! Addison's Cato.

2. First in dignity.

All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt. Sidney, b. ii.

These ride foremost in the field,
As they the foremost rank of honour held. Dryden.

FOREPART. adj. [fore and part.] Past before a certain time.

Now cease, ye dainties, your delights forepart;
Enough it is that all the day is your's. Spenser's Epithalam.

My forepart proofs, howe'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity, Shakespeare.

Having vainly fear'd too little.
Such is the treaty which he negotiates with us, an offer and tender of a reconciliation, an act of oblivion, of all forepart fins, and of a new covenant. Hammond on Fundamentals.

FOREPOSESSED. adj. [fore and possession.] Preoccupied; pre-possessed; pre-engaged.

The testimony either of the ancient fathers, or of other classical divines, may be clearly and abundantly answered, to the satisfaction of any rational man, not extremely forepossessioned with prejudice. Sander's Judgment.

FO'RERANK. n. f. [fore and rank.] First rank; front.

Yet leave our cousin Catharine here with us;
She is our capital demand, compris'd
Within the forerank of our articles. Shakespeare, Henry V.

FORERECITED. adj. [fore and recite.] Mentioned or enumerated before.

Did him recount
The forerecited practices, whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much. Shak. Hen. VIII.

TO FORERUN. v. a. [fore and run.]

1. To come before as an earnest of something following; to introduce as an harbinger.

Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foreruns the good event. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

The fun
Was set, and twilight from the East came on, Forerunning night. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

She bids me hope: oh heav'n's, she pities me!
And pity still foreruns approaching love.
As lightning does the thunder. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. To precede; to have the start of.

I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin to follow, if not fore-run, all that is or will be practised in London. Graunt.

FORERUNNER. n. f. [from fore-run.]

1. An harbinger; a messenger sent before to give notice of the approach of those that follow.

The six strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a seventh, the prince of Morocco. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

A cock was sacrificed as the forerunner of day and the sun, thereby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine bounty, the daughter of providence. Stillingfleet.

My elder brothers, my forerunners came,
Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd, and lame:

FOR

Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;
'Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryden, Aurengz.

Already opera prepares the way,
The sure forerunner of her gentle sway. Pope's Dunciad.

2. A prognostick; a sign foretelling any thing.

O Eve! some further change awaits us nigh,
Which heav'n, by these mute signs in nature, shews Forerunners of his purpose. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death. South's Sermons.

The keeping insensible perspiration up in due measure is the cause as well as sign of health, and the least deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a disease. Arbutnot.

TO FORESA'Y. v. a. [fore and say.] To predict; to prophesy; to foretell.

The first of them could things to come foresee;
The next, could of things present best advise;
The third, things past could keep in memory. Fairy Queen.

If there be any thing foreseen that is not usual, be armed for it by any hearty though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes. Taylor.

At h's foreseen approach, already quake
The Caspian kingdoms and Meotian lake:
Their seers behold the tempest from afar,
And threatening oracles denounce the war. Dryden's Æn.

TO FORESHAME. v. a. [for and shame.] To shame; to bring reproach upon.

Oh bill, foreshaming
Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
Without a monument. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO FORRESHAW. v. a. [See FORESHOW.]

FO'RESHIP. n. f. [fore and ship.] The anterior part of the ship.

The shipmen would have cast anchors out of the fore-ship. Acts xxvii. 30.

TO FORESHORTEN. v. a. [fore and shorten.] To shorten figures for the sake of shewing those behind.

The greatest parts of the body ought to appear foremost; and he forbids the foreshortening, because they make the parts appear little. Dryden's Duplemy.

TO FORESHOW. v. a. [fore and show.]

1. To discover before it happens; to predict; to prognosticate.

Christ had called him to be a witness of his death, and resurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moses had foreshowed. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.

Whose purple blush the day foreshowed.
You chose to withdraw yourself from publick business, when the face of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreshowed a storm. Dryden.

2. To represent before it comes.

What else is the law but the gospel foreshowed? What other the gospel than the law fulfilled? Hooker, b. v.

FO'RESIGHT. n. f. [fore and sight.]

1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below; while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou slept'st, whilst she to life was form'd. Milton.

2. Provident care of futurity.

He had a sharp foresight, and working wit,
That never idle was, he once could rest a whit. Fair Qu.

In matters of arms he was both skillful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution present and great. Hayward.

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be born or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them. Rogers's Sermons.

FO'RESIGHTFUL. adj. [foresight and full.] Precient; provident.

Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his silly successor. Sidney, b. ii.

TO FORESIGNIFY. v. a. [fore and signify.] To betoken beforehand; to foreshow; to typify.

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Psalms did but fore signify. Hooker, b. v.

Yet as being past times noxious, where they light
On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent
They oft fore signify, and threaten ill. Milton's Par. Reg.

FO'RESKIN. n. f. [fore and skin.] The prepuce.

Their own hand
An hundred of the faithless foe shall slay,
And for a dow'r their hundred foreskins pay,
Be Michel thy reward. Cowley's Davidsin.

FO'RESKIRT. n. f. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before.

A thousand

FOR

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation?

That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

TO FORESLACK. v. a. [fore and slack.] To neglect by idleness.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foreslacked, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Spenser's State of Ireland.

TO FORESLOW. v. a. [fore and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.

No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreslow
Their hasty pace. Fairfax, b. i.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,
Foreslow'd her passage, to behold her form. Dryden.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, relolved with speed to assail them. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Chremes, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslow?
Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests spite
Their boats are lost; while we may fit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none. P. Fletcher.

TO FORESLOW. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of life and victory:

Foreslow no longer, make we hence again. Shak. Hen. VI.

TO FORESPEAK. v. n. [fore and speak.]

1. To predict; to foretell; to foreshow; to foretell.

Old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden's Remains.

You shall find his vanities forespent,
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his fender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shakespeare.

FO'RESPURR. n. f. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly Summer was at hand,
As this forespurrier comes before his lord. Shakespeare.

FO'REST. n. f. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground, with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunfinane's high hill Shall come against him.

—That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champagnes, but grating, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon's Natural History, No. 936.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Rescommon.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king, for his pleasure; which territory of ground is bounded with inremovable marks, and replenished with beasts of venery or chase, and with great coverts of vert for their fucour and abode: for the preservation of which place, vert, and venison, there are certain particular laws. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, under the broad seal of England, directed to certain discreet persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he claims is made throughout all the country where the ground lies, that none shall hunt or chase any wild beasts within that precinct, without the king's special licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agitors, regards, bailiffs, and headles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pypowders to a fair. Cowel.

TO FORESTALL. v. a. [fore and stall, Saxon.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can't speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech: do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall. Fairy Queen.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force
To be forestall'd ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

May
This night forestall him of the coming day. Shak. Cymbeline.

But for my tears,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

I will not forestall your judgment of the rest. Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,

 And let another hand, not thine, exact
 Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton's Agonistes, l. 506.
 Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,
 Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Waller.
 2. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.
 Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
 And you but waste your words. Shak. Measure for Measure.
 Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
 To FORFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.
 If then a man, on light conditions, gain
 A great estate to him, and his, for ever;
 If wilfully he forfeit it again,
 Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver? Drayton.
 Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness. Boyle.
 A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.
 FORFEIT. participial adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.
 All the souls that are, were forfeit once;
 And he that might the vantage best have took,
 Found out the remedy. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
 Beg that thou mayst have leave to hang thyself;
 And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
 Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shaksp. Measure.
 This now fenceless world,
 Forfeit to death. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 303.
 Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
 And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryd. Virg. Geor.
 Methought with wondrous ease he swallow'd down
 His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryd. Indian Emp.
 How the murderer paid his forfeit breath;
 What lands so distant from that scene of death,
 But trembling heard the fame! Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.
 FORFEITABLE. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.
 FORFEITURE. n. f. [from forfeiture, French, from forfeit.]
 1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.
 2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.
 The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if Imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon's War with Spain.
 Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.
 He fairly abdicates his throne,
 He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.
 To FOREFEND. v. a. To prevent; to forbid. Hammer.
 FORGA'VE. The preterite of forgive.
 FORGE. n. f. [from for and ge, French.]
 1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.
 Now behold,
 In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
 How London doth pour out her citizens. Shak. Henry V.
 In other part flood one, who at the forge
 Labouring, two maffy clods of iron and brags
 Had melted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
 Th' o'er-labour'd Cyclop from his talk retires,
 Th' Æolian forge exhausted of his fires. Pope's Statius.
 2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.
 From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hobbes, b. v. f. 26.
 To FORGE. v. a. [from for and ge, old French.]
 1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.
 The queen of martials,
 And

FOR

- And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,
 Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman's Iliad, l. xviii.
 Tiger with tiger, bear with bear you'll find
 In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
 But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
 And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
 Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
 Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword. Tate's Jew.
 2. To make by any means.
 He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
 'Till he had forg'd himself a name 't' th' fire
 Of burning Rome. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 His heart's his mouth:
 What his breath forges, that his tongue must vent. Shaksp.
 Those few names that the schools forge, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of public approbation. Locke.
 3. To counterfeit; to falsify.
 Were I king,
 I should cut off the nobles for their lands:
 My more having would be as fauce
 To make me hunger more, that I should forge
 Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal, Destroying them for wealth. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 FORGER. n. f. [from forge.]
 1. One who makes or forms.
 2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.
 As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.
 No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. West on the Resurrection.
 FORGERY. n. f. [from forge.] The crime of falsification.
 Has your king married the lady Gray?
 And now, to sooth your forger and his,
 Sends me a paper to persuade me patience. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts, had they been false, to have shewn their falshood, and to have convicted them of forger. Stephens's Sermons.
 A forger, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books fold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.
 2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.
 He ran on embattl'd armies clad in iron,
 And weaponless himself,
 Made arms ridiculous, useless the forger
 Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
 Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail
 ADAMANT proof. Milton's Agonistes, l. 179.
 To FORGET. v. a. preter. forgot; part. forgotten, or forgot. [from for and get, Dutch.]
 1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.
 That is not forgot
 Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,
 I never in my life did look on him. Shaksp. Richard II.
 When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
 And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
 Of me must more be heard. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
 Oh, my oblivion is a very Anthony,
 And I am all forgotten. Shaksp. Anthony and Cleopatra.
 Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Ecclesiast. xxxvii. 6.
 No sooner was our deliverance compleated, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Atterbury's Sermons.
 Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.
 2. Not to attend; to neglect.
 Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget; yet will I not forget thee. Isa. xlix. 5.
 The mass of mean forgotten things. Anon.
 FORGETFUL. adj. [from forget.]
 1. Not retaining the memory of.
 2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.
 But when a thousand rolling years are past,
 So long their punishments and penance last,
 Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
 Compell'd to drink the deep Lethæan flood,
 In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
 Of their past labours, and their irksome years. Dryd. Æn.
 3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.
 Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. Hebr. xiii. 2.
 The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
 In our long absence. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
 Have you not love enough to bear with me,
 When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
 Makes me forgetful? Shaksp. Julius Cæsar.

FOR

- I, in fact, a real interest have,
 Which to my own advantage I would save;
 And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
 To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.
 FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from forgetful.]
 1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.
 O gentle sleep!
 Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
 That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
 And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Shaksp. Henry IV.
 All birds and beasts lie hid'd; sleep steals away
 The wild desires of men and toils of day;
 And brings, descending through the silent air,
 A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope's Statius.
 2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.
 The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty. Hobbes, b. iv. f. 13.
 FORGETTER. n. f. [from forget.]
 1. One that forgets.
 2. A careless person.
 To FORGIVE. v. a. [from for and ge, Saxon.]
 1. To pardon a person; not to punish.
 Then heaven forgive him too! Shaksp. Macbeth.
 I do beseech your grace for charity;
 If ever any malice in your heart
 Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.
 —Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
 As I would be forgiven: I forgive all. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
 Slowly provok'd, the easily forgiven. Prior.
 2. To pardon a crime.
 The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Is. xxxiii. 24.
 3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.
 The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt. Mat. xviii. 27.
 FORGIVENESS. n. f. [from forgive, Saxon.]
 1. The act of forgiving.
 To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgiveness. Dan.
 2. Pardon of an offender.

 where they were not placed to stay three months in the year. Swift's Essay on Modern Education.
 7. Ceremony; external rites.
 Though well we may not pass upon his life,
 Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
 Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
 May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors' opinions than that fit lower. Bacon, Essay 53.
 That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies in Ireland.
 Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms. Clarendon, b. viii.
 How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
 Is it a compliment of forms, or love? A. Phil. Dis. Math.
 8. Stated method; established practice.
 He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hapker, b. iii. f. 2.
 Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confuted variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.
 Nor seek to know
 Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden's En.
 9. A long seat.
 If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts's Logic.
 I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakespeare.
 10. A class; a rank of students.

 6. To contrive; to coin.
 The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions form'd for promoting it. Decay of Piety.
 He dies too soon;
 And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
 The thought that labours in my forming brain,
 Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rowe.
 7. To model by education or institution.
 Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
 And seem to labour when he labours not:
 Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
 And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryd. Virg. Geo.
FORMAL. adj. [formal, French; formalis, Latin.]
 1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affection:
 The justice,
 In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
 With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
 Full of wise saws and modern instances,
 And so he plays his part. Shakespeare's As you like it.
Formal in apparel,
 In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakespeare.
 Ceremonies especially be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon, Essay 53.
 2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.
 There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but the same may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.
 As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemy of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pyrates. Bacon's Holy War.
 3. Regular; methodical.
 The formal stars do travel so,
 As we their names and courses know;
 And he that on their changes looks,
 Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.
 4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.
 Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
 Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryd. Aureng.
 5. Depending upon establishment or custom.
 Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
 Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.
 6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.
 Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Hall's Elements of Speech.

FOR

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillington.
 The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentl.
 7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic.
 Thou shoud'st come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
 Not like a formal man. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

 'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
 With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
 To make of him a formal man again. Shakespeare. Com. of Err.
FORMALIST. n. f. [formaliste, French, from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who preters appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.
 It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon, Essay 27.
 A grave, stanch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a formal reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South's Sermons.
FORMALITY. n. f. [formalite, French, from form.]
 1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.
 The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker, b. v. f. 19.
 Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.
 Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange, Fable 184.
 Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury's Sermons.
 2. Solemn order, habit, or dress.
 If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
 Though sign'd with all formality of law;
 And though the signing and the seal proclaim
 The barefaced perjury, and fix the shame. Dryden's Juven.
 The pretreuder would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all fat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.
 3. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.
 To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the impossure of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glauco Scept. c. 13.
 May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillington's Def. of Diss. on Rom. Idol.
TO FORMALIZE. v. a. [formaliser, French, from formal.]
 1. To model; to modify. A word not now in use.
 The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were to many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.
 2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.
FORMALLY. adv. [from formal.]
 1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies or rites.
Formally, according to our law,
 Depose him. Shakespeare's Richard II.
 2. Ceremoniously; stily; precisely.
 To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier on Pride.
 3. In open appearance; with visible and apparent show.
 You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.
 4. Essentially; characteristically.
 This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South's Sermons.
 The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalridge's Sermons.
FORMATION. n. f. [formation, French, from forma, Latin.]
 1. The act of forming or generating.
 The matter discharged forth of vulcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arbuth.
 Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
 2. The manner in which a thing is formed.
 The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FOR

FORMATIVE. adj. [from forma, Latin.] Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the femal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FORMER. n. s. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Roy on the Creation.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Saxon, first; whence former, and formst now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before.] Formst is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say, the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past; as, this was the custom in former times.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places mentioned were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their Summer. Addison on Italy.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbutnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [from formidabilis, Latin; formidabile, Fr.]

Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's An. Dedicat.

They seem'd to fear the formidable fight, Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. s. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chafe to be shew'd the formidableness of their danger, than, by a blind embracing it, to perish in it. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakespeare's K. John.

FORMULARY. n. s. [from formulaire, French, from formula.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULE. n. s. [from formula, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

TO FORNICATION. v. a. [from fornix, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown's Vul. Err.

FORNICATION. n. s. [from fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a try of fornication is at the door. Shakespeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In Scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications, on every one that passed by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

FORNICATOR. n. s. [from fornicator, French, from fornix, Latin.]

One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

FORNICATRESS. n. s. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;
Let her have needful but not slavish means. Shakespeare.

TO FORSAKE. v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsook, or forsoke. [from forsoeken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

I was now the time when first Saul God forsook, God Saul; the room in's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time
To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;
Prevent his falsehood, and forsoke him first:
I know you hate him. A. Phillips's Displeas'd Mother.

Daughter of Jove! whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield,

FOR

Forsook by thee, in vain I fought thy aid. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state, Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden's An.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryd. Ovid.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,

Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsoke,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more. Rome.

FORSAKER. n. s. [from forsoke.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies,
Most hateful forsoakers of God. Apocrypha.

FORSOOTH. adv. [from forsooth, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection? Shakespeare.

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Holder's Elem. of Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arbutnot. Hist. of J. Bull.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that finem orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shew'd his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

TO FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forsovere; part. forsovere. [from forsoverian, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forsovere her,
As one unworthy all the former favours,
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakespeare.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forsovere most monstrously to have. Shakespeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forsovere thy gold! Dryd. Juven.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forsovere himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsovere?
To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsovere?
To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsovere?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shakespeare.

One says, he never should endure the fight
Of that forsovere, that wrongs both land and laws. Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Thebes;
And yet am false, forsovere: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood. Smith.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forsovere, and for murder too. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

FORT. n. s. [from fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they call'd the fort de l'or; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send
For the loud engines which their idle defend. Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part. Denham's Sephy.

My fury does, like jealous forts, pursue
With death, ev'n strangers who but come to view. Dryden.

FORTED. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts.

Not used now.

Your

FOR

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rature of oblivion. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

FORTH. adv. [from for, Saxon; whence further and farthest.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her out. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 9.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner. Whitgift.

Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance vow'd For Bitias' death. Dryden's An.

3. Abroad; out of doors.

Uncle, I must come forth. Shakespeare's Othello.

I have no mind of feasting forth to-night. Shakespeare.

Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
Will the not forth? Shakespeare.

When Winter past, and Summer scarce begun, Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden's Virg. An.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privately relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privily upon them. Spenser.

Even that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France. Shakespeare.

5. Out into public state; public view.

You may set forth the fame with farmhouses. Peacham.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave a propitious end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.

You, cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shakespeare.

7. To a certain degree.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hanmond.

8. On to the end.

I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor bad me say forth;
I said I was taught no more. Memoir in S. rype.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret. Shakespeare.

Some forth their cabins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands, what they would not know. Donne.

FORTHCOMING. adj. [from forth and coming.] Ready to appear; not abdicating; not lost.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all. Shak. H. VI.

FORTHISSUING. adj. [from forth and issuing.] Coming out; coming forward from a covert.

Forthissuing thus, the gave him first to wield
A weighty axe, with truest temper steel'd,
And double edg'd. Pope's Odyssey, b. v.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [from forth and right.] Strait forward; without flexions.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seem'd as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind. Sidney, b. ii.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself. Sidney, b. ii.

Arrived there, they pass'd in forthright;
For still to all the gate stood open wide. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Thither forthright he rode to rouse the prey,
That shaded by the fern in harbour lay,
And thence dislodg'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

FORTHWITH. adv. [from forth and with.] Immediately; without delay; at once; straight.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights
And dreams, 'gan now to take more found repast. Fa. Qu.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the musick brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
Of sovereign power, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held At Pandemonium. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

FOR

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. South's Sermons.

FORTHETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail
To be the fortieth man in an entail? Donne.

Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FORTHIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. s. [from fortification, French, from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœacians, tho' an unwelcome nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Notes on the Odyssey.

2. A place built for strength.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney, b. ii.

FORTIFIER. n. s. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

TO FORTIFY. v. a. [from fortify, French.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunstanne he strongly fortifies. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He fortified the city against besieging. Exclus. l. 4.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney, b. ii.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

FORTILAGE. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort; a blockhouse.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the strait. Spenser on Ireland.

FORTIN. n. s. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege.

Thou hast talk'd
Of palisadoes, fortins, parapets. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

FORTITUDE. n. s. [from fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The better fortitude

Of patience, and heroic martyrdom Unsung. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell! Shakespeare's H. VI.

FORTLET. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort.

FORTNIGHT. n. s. [contracted from fourteen nights, prophetijne night, Saxon. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day seven-night. So Tacitus, Non diurnum numerum ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney, b. ii.

FOR

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Sponser on Ireland.
The trump of death found in their hearing shrill;
Their weapon, faith; their fortresses was the grave. Fairfax.
God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shak. Hen. VI.
There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obfuscate and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [from fortuitus, French; fortuitus, Lat.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder then it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Ray on the Creation.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring. Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

FORTUITOUSNESS. n. f. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [from fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryd. Knight's Tale.
No, there is a necessity in fate

Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:

True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing mis. Dry.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wife, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. f. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney, b. ii.

FORTUNE. n. f. [from fortuna, Latin; fortune, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shak. H. VI.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Event; success good or bad.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give. Dryd. Innocence.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou do'st
As this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way
To noble fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power
Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour? Dryd. Virg. Past.

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryden.

He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heirs rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune seeking. Prolog. to Orphan.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Spectator.

FOR

When mis delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who mens fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny. Cowley's Mistress.

TO FORTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.] To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortun'd, as fair it then befell,
Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.

It fortun'd the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk
In the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning that the Turks prepared the next day to give a general assault. Kneller.

I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortun'd. Shakespeare.

Here fortun'd Curl to slide. Pope's Dunciad.

FORTUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious show
Of the full fortun'd Caesar ever shall Be brook'd with me. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

FORTUNEBOOK. n. f. [from fortune and book.] A book consulted to know fortune or future events.

Thou know'st a face, in whose each look Beauty lays ope love's fortunebook;
On whose fair revolutions wait
The obsequious motions of love's fate. Crahan.

FORTUNEHUNTER. n. f. [from fortune and hunt.] A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortunehunters and fortunestealers. Spectator, N^o. 312.

TO FORTUNESELL. v. n. [from fortune and sell.]

1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling. Shakespeare.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you.
The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortunetelling. Walton's Angler.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleaveland.

FORTUNETELLER. n. f. [from fortune and teller.] One who cheats common people by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shakespeare.

A Welchman being at a sessions-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon's Aphorisms.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot? Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange, Fable 94.

Long ago a fortuneteller Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.

FORTY. adj. [from quatuordecim, Saxon.] Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them. Shak. Coriol.

He that upon levity quits his station, in hopes to be better, 'tis forty to one loses. L'Estrange.

FORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Any public place.

The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,
And near a forum flank'd with marble fountains,
Where the bold youth, the num'rous fleets to store,
Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar. Pope.

TO FORWARDER. v. a. [from for and wander.] To wander wildly and wearily.

The better part now of the ling'ring day
They travelled had, when as they far esp'd
A weary wight forward'ring by the way. Fairy Queen, b. i.

FORWARD. adv. [from for and ward.] Towards; to a part or place before; onward; progressively.

When fervent sorrow flaked was,
She up arose, reliving him to find
Alive or dead, and forward forth dotli pass. Fairy Queen.

From smaller things the mind of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth of his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon's Essays.

FORWARD.

FOS

FORWARD. adj. [from the adverb.]

1. Warm; earnest.

They would that we should remember the poor, which I also was forward to do. Cal. ii. 10.

2. Ardent; eager; hot; violent.

You'll still be too forward. Shakespeare. Two Gent. of Verona.
Unkill'd to dart the pointed spear,
Or lead the forward youth to noble war. Prior.

Old Bute's form he took, Anchises' fquire,
Now left to rule Afcanus by his fire;
And thus salutes the boy, too forward for his years. Dryd.

4. Not reserved; not over modest.

'Tis a perious boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

5. Premature; early ripe.

Short Summer lightly has a forward Spring. Sh. R. III.

6. Quick; ready; hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent; anterior: opposed to posterior.

Let us take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quickit decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.

My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as She is 't' th' rear o' our birth. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

TO FORWARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Whenever I dine,
I forward the grass and I ripen the vine. Swift.

2. To patronize; to advance.

FORWARDER. n. f. [from forward.] He who promotes any thing.

FORWARDLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Eagerly; hastily; quickly.

The sudden and surprising turns we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Atter.

FORWARDNESS. n. f. [from forward.]

1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hook.

Is it so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a baffle to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Hooker, b. iv. f. 9.

If the great ones were in forwardness, the people were in fury, entertaining this airy phantasm with incredible affection. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. Quickness; readiness.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness; to the end that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him. Wotton.

3. Earliness; early ripeness.

4. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, from their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance. Addison on Italy.

FOSSEL. adj. [from fossilis, Latin; fossile, French.] That which is dug out of the earth.

The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest such as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent seas. Woodward's Natural History.

Fossil or rock salt, and sal gemm, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure. Woodward's Natural History.

FOS

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal, being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FOSFIL. n. f.

In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils; under which are comprehended metals and minerals. Locke.

Many kinds of fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped. Bentley's Sermons.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole. Hill's Mat. Med.

TO FOSTER. v. a. [from for and stare, Saxon.]

1. To nurse; to feed; to support; to train up.

Thy threat'ning colours now wind up,
And tame the savage spirit of wild war;
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace. Shakespeare. King John.

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children. Shakespeare.
Our kingdom's earth should not be foil'd
With that dear blood, which it hath fostered. Shakespeare. R. II.

That base wretch,
Bred on alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood. Davies on Ireland.

No more let Ireland brag her harmless nation
Fosters no venom, since that Scots plantation. Cleaveland.

The son of Mulciber,
Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains,
A shepherd and a king at once he reigns. Dryd. Æn. b. vii.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney, b. ii.

3. To cherish; to forward.

Ye fostering breezes, blow;
Ye softening dews, ye tender showers descend. Thomson.

FOSTERAGE. n. f. [from foster.] The charge of nursing; aliterage.

Some one adjoining to this lake had the charge and fosterage of this child, who being, perchance, but some base and obscure creature, was cast from the top of her temple into the lake adjoining; and, as the poets have feigned, changed by Venus into a fish, all but her face. Raleigh's History.

FOSTERBROTHER. n. f. [from for and brother, Saxon.] One bred at the same pap; one fed by the same nurse.

FOSTERCHILD. n. f. [from for and child, Saxon.] A child nursed by a woman not the mother, or bred by a man not the father.

The fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their foster-fathers. Davies on Ireland.

The goddess thus beguill'd,
With pleasant stories, her false fosterchild. Addis. Ov. Met.

FOSTERDAM. n. f. [from foster and dam.] A nurse; one that performs the office of a mother by giving food to a young child.

There, by the wolf, were laid the martial twins:
Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung;
The fosterdam loll'd out her fawning tongue. Dryden's Æn.

FOSTEREARTH. n. f. [from foster and earth.] Earth by which the plant is nourished, though it did not grow at first in it.

In vain, the nursing grove
Seems fair a while, cherish'd with fosterearth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails! Philips.

FOSTERER. n. f. [from foster.] A nurse; one who gives food in the place of a parent.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers; the rich men selling, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children: in the opinion of the Irish fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood; and the fosterchildren do love, and are beloved of their fosterfathers and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred. Davies on Ireland.

FOSTERFATHER. n. f. [from for and father, Saxon.] One who gives food in the place of the father.

In Ireland fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their fosterfathers, and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred. Davies on Ireland.

The duke of Bretagne having been an host and a kind of parent or fosterfather to the king, in his tenderness of age and weakness of fortune, did look for aid this time from king Henry. Bacon's Henry VII.

Tyrreus, the fosterfather of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's Æn.

FOSTERMOTHER. n. f. [from foster and mother.] A nurse.

FOSTERNURSE. n. f. [from foster and nurse.] This is an improper compound, because foster and nurse mean the same.] A nurse.

FOU

- Our foster nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks. Shakespeare's King Lear.
FOSTERSON. n. f. [foster and son.] One fed and educated, though not the son by nature.
Mature in years, to ready honours move;
O of celestial seed! O foster son of Jove! Dryd. Virg. Poet.
FOUGADE. n. f. [French.] In the art of war, a fort of little mine in the manner of a well, scarce more than ten feet wide and twelve deep, dug under some work or fortification, and charged with barrels or sacks of gunpowder to blow it up, and covered over with earth. Dict.

by melting and pouring into moulds; to cast.
FOUNDATION. n. f. [fundation, French.]
1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.
The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighted the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which ministrerth unto the other nourishment and life, is in the bosom of the earth concealed.
Hooker, b. i. f. 1.
That is the way to make the city flat,
To bring the roof to the foundation,
To bury all. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
O Jove, I think,
Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be reliev'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
I draw a line along the shore;
I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden's En.
2. The act of fixing the basis.
Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest. Tickel.
3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.
If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds. Tillotson, Sermon 6.
That she should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is a foundation in nature for it. Locke.

tion*. Swift.
6. Establishment; settlement.
FOUNDER. n. f. [from found.]
1. A builder; one who raises an edifice; one who presides at the erection of a city.
Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as seas to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town. Waller.
Nor was Proeneste's founder wanting there,
Whom fame reports the son of Mulciber;
Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains;
A shepherd and a king at once he reigns. Dryden's En.
2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.
The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founders charity in the dust laid low. Dryden.

Blaspheme the sacred founder of our rules. Rescommon.
When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,
The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the center with his flaming dart
Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art. Dryden's En.
King James I. the founder of the Stuart race, had he not confined all his views to the peace of his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles. Addison's Freehold.
Nor can the skilful herald trace
The founder of thy ancient race. Swift.
4. [Fondeur, French.] A cafter; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds.
Founders add a little antimony to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so pewterers to their pewter, to make it found more clear like silver. Grew's Museum.
To FOUNDER. v. a. [fondre, French.] To cause such a fore-ness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.
Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,
Or night kept chain'd below. Shakespeare's Tempest.

FOU

- I have founder'd nine score and odd posts; and here, travel-lainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight;
but what of that? he saw me and yielded. Shakel. Henry IV.
Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-swinn'd racers of the flood. Dorset.
Brutes find out where their talents lie:
A bear will not attempt to fly;
A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five-bar'd gate. Swift.
If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and founder'd into the bargain. Swift's Directions to the Groom.
Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither rely nor vicious. Swift.
To FOUNDER. v. n. [from fonds, French, the bottom.]
1. To sink to the bottom.
New ships, built at those rates, have been ready to founder in the seas with every extraordinary storm. Raleigh's Essays.

figures are formed of melted metal; a castinghouse.
FOUNDLING. n. f. [from found of find.] A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.
We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow. Sidney.
I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own,
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance. Dryd. Juven.
I shall mention a piece of charity which is practised by most of the nations about us: I mean a provision for foundlings, or for those children who, for want of such a provision, are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents. Addison.
The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had fought his suff'rings to redress;
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art
Practis'd in streets. Gay's Trivia.
FOUNDERESS. n. f. [from founder.]
1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes, or begins any thing.
2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.
For of their order she was patroness,
Albe Charissa was their chiefest foundress. Fairy Queen, b. i.
For zeal like hers, her servants were to shew;
She was the first, where need requir'd to go;
Herself the foundress, and attendant too. Dryden.
FOUNT.
FOUNTAIN. n. f. [fons, Latin; fontaine, French.]
1. A well; a spring.
He set before him spread
A table of celestial food divine,
Ambrosial fruits, fetcht from the tree of life;
And from the fount of life ambrosial drink. Milt. Par. Reg.
2. A small basin of springing water.
Proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Can a man drink better from the fountain when it is finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf?
Taylor's Rule of living holy.
Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;
But whilst within the crystal fount he tries
To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise. Addison.
3. A jet; a spout of water.
Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkleth or spouteth water; the other a fair receipt of water, without filth, or slime, or mud. Bacon, Essay 47.
4. The head or first spring of a river.
All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenor of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends. Dryden.
5. Original; first principle; first cause.
Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness. Comm. Prayer.
You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains. Pascal.
This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, not only the fountain of habits and fashions, and good breeding, but of morally good or bad manners to all England. Spratt's Sermons.
FOUNTAINLESS. adj. [from fountain.] Without a fountain;
without a spring.

FOW

So large
The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert fountains and dry. Milton's Parad. Reg.
FOUNTAINFUL. adj. [fount and full.] Full of springs.
But when the fountful Ida's top they seal'd with utmost haste,
All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks. Chapman's Iliads.
TO FOUPE. v. a. To drive with sudden impetuosity. A word out of use.
We pronounce, by the confession of strangers, as smoothly and moderately as any of the northern nations, who foupe their words out of the throat with fat and full spirits. Camden.
FOUR. adj. [peopen, Saxon.] Twice two.
Just as I with'd, the lots were cast on four;
Myself the fifth. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.
FOURBE. n. f. [French.] A cheat; a tricking fellow. Not in use.
Jove's envoy, through the air,
Brings dismal tidings; as if such low care
Could reach their thoughts, or their repose disturb!
Thou art a false impostor, and a fourbe. Denham.
FOURFO'LD. adj. [four and fold.] Four times told.
He shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he had no pity.
2 Sa. xii. 6.
FOURFO'OTED. adj. [four and foot.] Quadruped; having twice two feet.
Augur Aftylos, whose art in vain
From fight dissuaded the fourfooted train,
Now beat the hoof with Nessus on the plain. Dryden.
FOURSCORE. adj. [four and score.]
1. Four times twenty; eighty.
When they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain, having lost fourscore of their ships, and the greater part of their men. Bacon's War with Spain.
The Chiots were first a free people, being a commonwealth, maintaining a navy of fourscore ships. Sandys.
The Liturgy had, by the practice of near fourscore years, obtained great veneration from all sober Protestants. Clarend.
2. It is used elliptically for fourscore years in numbering the age of man.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore it is too late a week. Shak. As you like it.
Some few might be of use in council upon great occasions,
'till after threecore and ten; and the two late ministers in Spain were to 'till fourscore. Temple.
FOUR SQUARE. adj. [four and square.] Quadrangular; having four sides and angles equal.
The temple of Bel was invironed with a wall carried foursquare, of great height and beauty; and on each square certain brazen gates curiously engraven. Raleigh's History.

seven.
She says I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale.
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
FOURTEENTH. adj. [from fourteen.] The ordinal of fourteen;
the fourth after the tenth.
I have not found any that see the ninth day, few before the twelfth, and the eyes of some not open before the fourteenth day. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 26.
FOURTH. adj. [from four.] The ordinal of four; the first after the third.
A third is like the former: filthy hags!
Why do you fiew me this? A fourth? Start eye!
What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom? Shak.
FOURTHLY. adv. [from fourth.] In the fourth place.
Fourthly, plants have their seed and seminal parts uppermost, and living creatures have them lowermost. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
FOURWHEELED. adj. [four and wheel.] Running upon twice two wheels.
Scarce twenty fourwheeled cars, compact and strong,
The maffy load could bear, and roll along. Pope's Odyssey.

of contempt.
A fourtra for the world, and worldlings base. Shak. H. IV.
FOWL. n. f. [pugel, Saxon; vogel, Dutch.] A winged animal; a bird. It is colloquially used of edible birds, but in books of all the feathered tribes.
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males subjects, and at their controuls. Shakesp.
Lucullus entertained Pompey in a magnificent house: Pompey said, this is a marvellous house for the Summer; but methinks very cold for Winter. Lucullus answered, do you not think me as wise as divers fowls, to change my habitation in the Winter season. Bacon's Apophthegms.
This mighty breath
Instructs the fowls of heaven. Thomson's Spring.
TO FOWL. v. n. [from the noun.] To kill birds for food or game.
FO'WLER. n. f. [from fowl.] A sportsman who pursues birds.
The fowler, warn'd
By those good omens, with swift early steps
Treads the crimp earth, ranging through fields and glades, Offensive to the birds. Phillips.

FRA

With slaughter'ing guns th' unweary'd fowler roves,
When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves. Pope.
FOWLINGPIECE. n. f. [fowl and piece.] A gun for birds.
'Tis necessary that the countryman be provided with a good fowlingpiece, to destroy and scare them away. Mortimer.
FOX. n. f. [fox, Saxon; vos, vogel, Dutch.]
1. A wild animal of the canine kind, with sharp ears and a bushy tail, remarkable for his cunning, living in holes, and preying upon fowls or small animals.
The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb. Shaksp.
He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.
2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.
FOXCASE. n. f. [fox and case.] A fox's skin.
One had better be laughed at for taking a foxcase for a fox, than be destroyed by taking a live fox for a case. L'Estrange.
FOXCHASE. n. f. [fox and chase.] The pursuit of the fox with hounds.
See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place or out;
Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a foxchase, wife at a debate. Pope's Epistle i.
FOXEVIL. n. f. [fox and evil.] A kind of disease in which the hair sheds.
FOXGLOVES. n. f. A plant.
The leaves are produced alternately on the branches: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into six ample long segments: the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulose and compressed, and a little reflexed at the brim:
these flowers are disposed in a long spike, and always grow upon one side of the stalk: the ovary of the flower becomes a roundish fruit, which ends in a point, and opens in the middle: it has two cells, in which many small seeds are contained. Miller.
FOXHUNTER. n. f. [fox and hunter.] A man whose chief ambition is to shew his bravery in hunting foxes. A term of reproach used of country gentlemen.
The foxhunters went their way, and then out steals the fox. L'Estrange, Fable 104.
John Wildfire, foxhunter, broke his neck over a six-bar gate. Spectator, No. 561.
FOXSHIP. n. f. [from fox.] The character or qualities of a fox; cunning; mischievous art.
Hadst thou foxship
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
FOXTRAP. n. f. [fox and trap.] A gin or snare to catch foxes.
Answer a question, at what hour of the night to set a foxtrap. Tatler, No. 56.
FOY. n. f. [foi, French.] Faith; allegiance. An obsolete word.
He Easterland subdued, and Denmark won,
And of them both did foy and tribute raise. Fairy Queen.
TO FRACT. v. a. [fractus, Latin.] To break; to violate; to infringe. Found perhaps only in the following passage.
His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.
FRACTION. n. f. [fraction, Fr. fractio, Latin.]
1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.
It hath been observed by several, that the surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; but more particularly several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. A broken part of an integral.
Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, con-sisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 13.
Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbutnot on Coins.
FRACTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number.
We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. Cocker's Arithmetick.
FRACTURE. n. f. [fractura, Latin.]
1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.
That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.
But thou wilt fin and grief destroy,
That to the broken bones may joy,
And tune together in a well-fet song,
Full of his praises,
Who dead men raises;
Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong. Herbert.
Fractures

FRA

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp's Surgery.
TO FRACTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To break a bone.
The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together. Wise's Surgery.
FRAGILE. adj. [fragile, French; fragilis, Latin.]
1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.
To ease them of their griefs,
Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage. Shakespeare's Timon.
The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile. Bacon's N. Hist.
When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,
'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line. Denham.
A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Clarv.
2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.
Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,
And fragile arms, much instrument of war,
Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
Before mine eyes thou'st set. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
FRAGILITY. n. f. [from fragile.]
1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.
To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoat bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon's N. Hist.
2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.
Fearing the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune. Kneller's History.
3. Frailty; lability to fault.
All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility. Watson.
FRAGMENT. n. f. [fragmentum, Latin.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.
He who late a sceptre did command,
Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand. Dryden.
Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davids, has shewn us this way to improvement. Watts's Improvement.
If a thinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opt.
FRAGMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. A word not elegant, nor in use.
She, she is gone; she's gone: when thou know'st this,
What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
Thou know'it, and that it is not worth a thought;
He knows it too too much that thinks it nought. Donne.
FRAGOR. n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack; a crash.
Pursu'd by hideous fragors, as before
The flames descend, they in their breaches roar. Sandys.
FRAGRANCE. n. f. [fragrantia, Lat.] Sweetness of smell;
FRAGRANCY. n. f. [from fragrance.] Sweetness of smell;
pleasing scent; grateful odour.
Eve separate he spies,
Veil'd in a cloud of fragrances, where the flood Half-spy'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrant and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison's Spectator, No. 47.
Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrant. Garth.
Such was the wine; to quench whole fervent steam Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
To cool one cup suffic'd; the goblet crown'd,
Breath'd aromatic fragrances around. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.
FRAGRANT. adj. [fragrans, Latin.] Odorous; sweet of smell.
The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scent, less fragrant than her breath. Prior.
FRAGRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.
As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FRAIL. n. f.
1. A basket made of rushes.
2. A rush for weaving baskets.
FRAIL. adj. [fragilis, Latin.]
1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.
I know my body's of so frail a kind,
As force without, fevers within can kill.
When with care we have rais'd this imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers's Sermon 5.
2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.
The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may

FRA

these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fall in words. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
FRAILNESS. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; infirmity.
There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.
FRAILTY. n. f. [from frail.]
1. Weakness of resolution; infirmity of mind; infirmity.
Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shak.
Nor should't thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:
Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel. Milton's Agonies.
God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.
2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity.
Love did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the mule. Dryden.
Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.
FRAISCHEUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.
Hither in summer-evenings you repair,
To taste the fraischeur of the purer air. Dryden.
FRAISE. n. f. [French, the caul of an animal.] A pancake with bacon in it.
TO FRAME. v. a.
1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.
The double gates he findeth locked fast;
The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,
The other all with silver overcast. Spenser.
2. To fit one to another.
They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do other such necessities to their convenient use, than to fight.
Abbot's Description of the World.
Hew the timber, saw it out, frame it, and let it together.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. To make; to compose.
Then chusing out few words most horrible,
Thereof did verses frame. Spenser.
Fight valiantly to-day;
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakesp.
4. To regulate; to adjust.
Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Tillotson.
5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.
Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
I have been a truant to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will. Shaksp. H. VI.
6. To form and digest by thought.
The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense, or from its own operations about them. Locke.
Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddesses by your matchless charms. Granv.
Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies;
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope's Odyssey.
How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years? Watts.
7. To contrive; to plan.
Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Clarendon, b. viii.
8. To settle; to scheme out.
Though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.
Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles. Bacon.
FRAME. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A fabric; any thing constructed of various parts or members.
If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker, b. i. l. 3.
Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.
These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame. Mil. Parad. Lost.
Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

FRA

The gate was adamant; eternal frames,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god; and all along Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong. Dryd.
We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
2. Any thing made so as to inclose or admit something else.
Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.
His picture scarcely would deserve a frame. Dryden's Juvenal.
A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turnings, shine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton's Opt.
3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.
A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright. Shakespeare.
Your steady soul preserves her frame;
In good and evil times the same. Swift.
4. Scheme; regularity.
Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church. Clarendon.
5. Contrivance; projection.
John the Bastard, Shakespeare.
Whose spirits toil in frame of villainies.
6. Mechanical construction.
7. Shape; form; proportion.
A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.
FRAMER. n. f. [from frame; piemman, Saxon.] Maker;
former; contriver; schemer.
The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune,
Should be improper, if all his actions were predetermined.
Hammond's Fundamentals.
There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals. Arbutnot on Coins.
FRAMPOLD. n. f. [This word is written by Dr. Hackett frampul. I know not its original.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.
Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: she leads a very frampold life with him. Shakespeare.
The frampul man could not be pacified.
Hackett's Life of Williams.
FRANCHISE. n. f. [from franchise, French.]
1. Exemption from any onerous duty.
2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.
They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them. Davies on Ireland.
His gracious edict the same franchise yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields. Dryden.
3. District; extent of jurisdiction.
There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser's State of Ireland.
TO FRANCHISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.
I lose no honour
In seeking to augment it; but still keep My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear. Shak. Macbeth.
FRANGIBLE. adj. [from frangere, Latin.] Fragile; brittle; easily broken.
Though it seem the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will shew itself very frangible. Boyle.
FRANION. n. f. [Of this word I know not the derivation.] A paramour; a boon companion.
First, by her side did sit the bold Sanfloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy,
Might not be found a franker franion. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
FRANK. adj. [from franc, French.]
1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.
The moister sorts of trees yield little moss, which is for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs.
Bacon's Natural History.
They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others. Spratt's Sermons.
'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing. L'Estrange.
2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.
3. Without conditions; without payment.
Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift,
And he will care for all the rest to thine. Hubbard's Tale.
4. Not restrained; licentious.
Might not be found a franker franion. Spenser.
FRANK. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A place to feed hogs in; a sty: so called from liberality of food.

FRA

Where sups here? Doth the old boar feed in the old frank? Shakespeare's Henry IV.
2. A letter which pays no postage.
You'll have immediately, by several franks, my epistle to lord Cobham. Pope to Swift.
3. A French coin.
TO FRANK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut up in a frank or sty. Hammer.
Tell Richmond this from me,
That in the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold:
If I revolt, off goes young George's head. Shak. Rich. III.
2. To feed high; to fat; to cram. Junius and Disworth.
3. [From the adjective.] To exempt letters from postage.
My lord Orrery writes to you to-morrow; and you see I send this under his cover, or at least franked by him. Swift.
Gazettes sent gratis down, and frank'd,
For which thy patron's weekly thank'd. Pope.
FRANKALMONE. n. f. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank aumone, or frankalmoine, which, according to Britton, is a tenure by divine service. Ayliffe's Parerg.
FRANKINCENSE. n. f. [from frank and incense; so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]
Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it still continues to be in many different parts of the world. As well however as the world has at all times been acquainted with the drug itself, we are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and much more so as to the tree which produces it. It is commended against disorders in the head and breast, and against diarrhoeas and dysenteries. Hill.
Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frankincense. Exod.
I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brerewood on Languages.
Black ebony only will in India grow,
And od'rous frankincense on the Sabæan bough. Dryd. Virg.
Cedar and frankincense, an od'rous pile,
Flam'd on the hearth, and wide perfume'd the ile. Pope.
FRANKLIN. n. f. [from frank.] A steward; a bailiff of land.
It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly English'd a gentleman servant.
A spacious court they see,
Both plain and pleasant to be walk'd in,
Where they does meet a franklin fair and free. Fai. Queen.
FRANKLY. adv. [from frank.]
1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.
Oh, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly. Sh. H. VIII.
When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them
Lu. vii. 42.
both.
By the toughness of the earth the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do. Bacon's Natural History.
I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs. Speet.
2. Without constraint; without reserve.
The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses;
and they, with the volunteers, who frankly lifted themselves, amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse. Clarend.
He entered very frankly into those new designs, which were contrived at court. Clarendon, b. viii.
FRANKNESS. n. f. [from frank.]
1. Plainness of speech; openness; ingenuofness.
When the conde duke had some éclaircissement with the duke, in which he made all the protestations of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared, with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him.
Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship: his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards. Addison's Guardian.
2. Liberality; bounteousness.
3. Freedom from reserve.
Upon occasion of the pictures present, he delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, as near as he could, word by word, what Kalandar had told him touching the strange story. Sidney.
The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon, Essay 6.
FRANKPLEDGE.

FRA

FRANKPLEDGE. n. f. [from francplegium, Latin, of franc, i. e. liber & plege, i. e. fidei iussor.] A pledge or surety for freemen. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: whereupon this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus francplegii, view of frankpledge. Cowel.
FRANTICK. adj. [corrupted from phreneticus, phreneticus,
Latin; & phrenes,] phrenes,] phrenes,]
1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and turbulently mad.

fugitive.]
1. A sudden and causeless change of place.
2. A sudden fancy; a humour; a whim; a capricious prank.
O! but I fear the fickle freaks, quoth she,
Of fortune, and the odds of arms in field. Fairy Queen.
When that freak has taken possession of a fantastical head, the distemper is incurable. L'Estrange, Fable 100.
She is so restless and peevish that she quarrels with all about her, and sometimes in a freak will instantly change her habitation. Speccator, N^o. 427.

FREE

To vex me more, he took a freak.
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.
To FREAK. v. a. [A word, I suppose, Scotch, brought into England by Thomson.] To variegate; to check.
There furry nations harbour:
Sables of glossy black, and dark embrown'd,
Or beauteous, freak'd with many a mingled hue. Thomson.
FREAKISH. adj. [from freak.] Capricious; humourfome.
It may be a question, whether the wife or the woman was the more freakish of the two; for she was still the same uneasy top. L'Estrange, Fable 173.
FREAKISHLY. adv. [from freakish.] Capriciously; humourfomely.
FREAKISHNESS. n. f. [from freakish.] Capriciousness; humourfomness; whimicalness.

FRECKLE. n. f. [from fleck, a spot, German; whence fleckle, freckle.]
1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.
Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen, Dryden.
Whole dusk set off the whiteness of the skin.
2. Any small spot or discoloration.
The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see:
Those be rubies fairy favours;
In those freckles live their favours. Sb. Midf. Night's Dream.
The farewell frosts and easterly winds now spot your tulips;
therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles. Evelyn.
FRECKLED. adj. [from freckle.] Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots.
Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With filken worms. Drayton's Cynthis.
The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And, thy freckled neck display'd,
Envy breeds in ev'ry maid. Swift.
FRECKLY. adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles.
FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries freds, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful, or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.
FREE. adj. [from frēah, Saxon; or ry, Dutch.]
1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependant.
Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any conditions of subjection. Temple.
Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains? Dryden.
How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.
This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains. Prior.
Set an unhappy pris'ner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.
2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.
Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.
It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.
3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.
Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
4. Permitted; allowed.
Why, fir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to fume, leaves free to all. Milton.
5. Licentious; unrestrained.
O conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Temple.
The critics have been very free in their censures. Felton.
I know there are to whole presumptuous thoughts
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults. Pope.

FREE

6. Open; ingenuous.
'Tis not to make me jealous;
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shakespeare's Othello.
Castalio, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend? Orway's Orph.
7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.
Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great slaughter. Hakewill on Providence.
Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior.
8. Liberal; not parsimonious.
Glo'ter too, a foe to citizens,
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as others spare. Pope's Horace.
Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope.
9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.
We wanted words to express our thanks; his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon's New Atlantis.
10. Clear from distrust.
Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind. Shakespeare's Lear.
11. Guiltless; innocent.
Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryden.
12. Exempt.
These
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denham.
Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.
Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.
The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.
13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body.
He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden.
Friend!
What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea? Dryden.
14. Without expence; by charity, as a free school.
To FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.
The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac. ii. 22.
Can'st thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand? Dryden.
Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.
2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill.
It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them. Clarendon.
Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar.
Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd. Dryden's Virg.
3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.
The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.
Fierce was the fight; but half'n'g to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.
4. To banish; to send away; to rid.
We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shakespeare's Rom. vi. 7.
5. To exempt.
For he that is dead is free'd from sin.
6. To unlock; to open.
This master-key
Free's every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.
FREEBO'OTER.

FREE

FREEBO'OTER. n. f. [from free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.
The Kentishmen, perceiving that Perkin was not followed by any English of name, and that his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom, professed their loyalty to the king. Bacon.
The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the seamen who became prisoners to them of that nation, and bound them back to back, and thrown them overboard into the sea. Clarendon, b. viii.
FREEBO'OTING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.
Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.
FREEBORN. n. f. [from free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.
O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world! Dryden.
I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.
Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from consent and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.
FREECHAPPEL. n. f. [from free and chappel.] Such chapels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chapel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowel.
FREECOST. n. f. [from free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.
We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South's Sermons.
FREEDMAN. n. f. [from freed and man.] A slave manumitted.
Libertus.
The freedman jostles, and will be preferred;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden's Juu. Sat. 1.
FREEDOM. n. f. [from free.]
1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.
The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.
O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe;
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden's Pers.
2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.
By our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakespeare.
3. Power of enjoying franchises.
This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.
4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.
I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.
In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South's Sermons.
5. Unrestraint.
I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.
6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.
7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.
FREEFO'OTED. adj. [from free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.
We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freefooted. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
FREHEARTED. adj. [from free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.
Love must frehearted be, and voluntary;
And not enchanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.
FREEHOLD. n. f. [from free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or foleland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions; and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record, to be found in some of her majesty's treasuries. Bacon's Office of Alienation.
There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison's Freeholder, No. 1.
My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.
I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give my own consent. Swift to Lord Middleton.
FREEHOLD. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.
As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.
FREE'LY. adv. [from free.]
1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.
2. Without restraint; lavishly.
If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would fiew most love. Shakespeare's Coriolan.
I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains
I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
3. Without scruple; without reserve.
Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope's Essay on Crit.
4. Without impediment.
To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true verifying, were even to eat acorns with wine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Addison's Schoolmaster.
The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wise;
But, set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden's Juu. Sat.
5. Without necessity; without predetermination.
Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell. Milton.
He leaves us to chafe with the liberty of reasonable beings; they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers's Sermons.
6. Frankly; liberally.
By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosom of the universe to all mankind. South's Sermons.
7. Spontaneously; of its own accord.
FREEMAN. n. f. [from free and man.]
1. One not a slave; not a vassal.
Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare's Jul. Cæsar.
If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worse, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are only the freemen. Locke.
2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.
He made us freemen of the continent,
Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.
What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
FREEMINDED. adj. [from free and mind.] Unconstrained; without load of care.
To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon's Essay 31.
FREENESS. n. f. [from free.]
1. The state or quality of being free.
2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuousness; candour.
The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.
3. Generosity; liberality.
I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Sprat.
FREESCHO'OL. n. f. [from free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.
To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one free-school at least erected in every diocess. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small free-school in —shire, where a gentleman of interest in the country, who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.
FREESPOKEN. adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.
Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a free-spoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.
FREESTONE. n. f. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.
Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakespeare's As you like it.
The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison on Italy.
FREETHINKER. n. f. [free and think.] A libertine; a con-temner of religion.
Atheist is an old-fashion'd word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison's Drummer.
Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabrick must fall to the ground. Swift's Argument against abolishing Christianity.
FREEWILL. n. f. [free and will.]
1. The power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.
We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.
2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.
I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezr. vii. 13.
FREEWOMAN. n. f. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.
All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. Mac. ii. 11.
TO FREEZE. v. n. preter. frose. [vriesen, Dutch.]
1. To be congealed with cold.
The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.
The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.
2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.
Orpheus with his lute made trees
And mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal,
And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryd.
TO FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.
1. To congeal with cold.
2. To kill by cold.
When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me,
Ev'n in his garments! Shakespeare's Richard III.
My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakespeare.
3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.
I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Sh. Rom. and Juliet.
Death came on a main,
And exercis'd below his iron reign;
Then upward to the seat of life he goes;
Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.
TO FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. freighted; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]
1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.
The princes
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Freight with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Shak. Troilus and Cressida, Prologue.
Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;

FRE

With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden's Juv.
Freighted with iron, from my native land
I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.
2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.
I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and
The freighting souls within her. Shakespeare's Tempest.
FREIGHT. n. f.
1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.
He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden's En.
2. The money due for transportation of goods.
FREIGHTER. n. f. [fretteur, French.] He who freights a vessel.
FREN. n. f. A worthless woman. An old word wholly forgotten.
But now from me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen;
And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart,
So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser's Poet.
FRENCH. Chalk. n. f.
French chalk is an indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.
French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as steatites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.
TO FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.
They mistook nothing more in king Edward the Con-fessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.
Has he familiarly dislik'd
Your yellow starch, or said your doublet
Was not exactly Frenchified. Shakespeare's As you like it.
FRENETICK. adj. [frenetique, French; Φρενιτικός; generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.
He himself impotent,
By means of his frenetick malady. Daniel's Civil War.
FRENZY. n. f. [Φρενις; phrenitis, Latin: whence phrenetick, phrenetick, phrenzy, or frenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.
That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shakespeare's Mer. Wives of Windsor.
True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison's Cato.
Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bent.
FREQUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Fr. frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.
The frequency of degree,
From high to low throughout. Shakespeare's Timon.
He, in full frequency bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Paradise Reg.
FREQUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]
1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.
Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally intitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterb.
2. Concourse; full assembly.
Thou cam'st e're while into this senate: who
Of such a frequency, so many friends
And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee? Ben. Jonson's Catil.
FREQUENT. adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]
1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.
An ancient and imperial city falls;
The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals. Dryden's En.
Frequent heres shall besiege your gates. Pope.
2. Used often to practise any thing.
Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, pro-vided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government. Swift.
3. Full of concourse.
Frequent and full. Milton.
TO FREQUENT. v. a. [frequent, Latin; frequenter, French.]
To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to.
Latter day,
Finding in it fit ports for fishers trade,
Gan more the same frequent, and further to invade. F. 2.
There were synagogues for men to resort unto: our Sa-viour himself, and after him the apostles, frequented them. Hooker, b. v. f. 11.
This fellow here, this thy creature,
By night frequents my house. Shakespeare's Timon.
At

FRE

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels. Bacon.
With tears
Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt. P. L.
To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
And there what I before digested, vent. Denham.
That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well re-ceived in it, is most undoubted. Dryden's Ovid, Preface.
FREQUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.] Convertible; acce-sible. A word not now used, but not inelegant.
While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Sidney, b. ii.
FREQUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentativus, French; frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.
FREQUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.
Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches. Swift.
FREQUENTLY. adv. [frequent, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom; a considerable number of times; manifold times.
I could not, without much grief, observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and an-swers. Swift's Introduction to Genteel Conversation.
FRESCO. n. f. [Italian.]
1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning.
Hellish sprites
Love more the fresco of the nights. Prior.
2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk.
Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.
FRESH. adj. [friscus, Saxon; fraiche, French.]
1. Cool; not rapid with heat.
I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the fresh spring. Prior.
2. Not salt.
They keep themselves unmixt with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot's Desc. of the World.
3. New; not impaired by time.
This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what's just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresh date will longer stay. Dryd. Indian Emp.
4. In a state like that of recentness.
We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in water. Denham.
With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.
Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milt. P. L.
5. Recent; newly come.
Amidst the spirits Palinurus pres'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryden's En.
Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they dissent their tortur'd joints. Dryden.
6. Repaired from any loss or diminution.
Nor lies the long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.
7. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.
This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him: take or-der that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon's holy War.
Two swains,
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.
8. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.
Tell me,
Hast thou beheld a fresh gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks? Shakespeare.
It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to the grave. Harvey on Consumptions.
They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, inno-cent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison's Spectator.
9. Brisk; strong; vigorous.
As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship. Holder.
10. Fastidious; opposed to eating or drinking. A low word.
11. Sweet: opposed to stale or stinking.

FRE

FRESH. n. f. Water not salt.
He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him
Where the quick freshes are. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Prelusive drops let all their moisture flow
In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. Thomson's Spring.
TO FRESHEN. v. n. To grow fresh.
A freshening breeze the magick power supply'd,
While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide. Pope's Odyssey.
FRESHET. n. f. [from fresh.] A pool of fresh water.
All fish from sea or shore,
Freshet or purling brook, or shell or fin. Milt. Parad. Lost.
FRESHLY. adv. [from fresh.]
1. Coolly.
2. Newly; in the former state renewed.
The weeds of hereby being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter often-times those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less per-nicious than at the first. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.
Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shak. Hen. V.
They are now freshly in difference with them. Bacon.
3. With a healthy look; ruddily.
Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled? Shakespeare.
FRESHNESS. n. f. [from fresh.]
1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidity.
Most odours smell best broken or crushed; but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their odour. Bacon's Natural History.
2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.
For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind; for surely no man was ever weary of thinking that he had done well or virtuously. South.
3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.
The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.
4. Coolness.
There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of Summer; but they be but pennings of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.
Say, if the please, the hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air. Dryden's Aureng.
She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air. Addison on Italy.
5. Ruddiness; colour of health.
The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating flains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Granville.
6. Freedom from fatness.
FRESHWATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatise those who come first to sea as freshwater men or novices.
The nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks. Knolles's History of the Turks.
FRET. n. f. [*Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from phrean, to eat; others from phrepan, to adorn; some from phrean; Skinner more probably from phrean, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum.]
1. A frith, or frath of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.
Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown's Vulg. Errours.
2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.
The channel of this river is white with rocks, and the sur-face covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, dischargeth itself of all heterogeneous mixtures. Derham's Physico-Theology.
3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.
It requirerh good winding of a string before it will make any note; and in the tops of lutes, &c. the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon's Nat. History.
The harp
Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All founds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice
Choral or unison. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or*

FRE

- or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Grew's Cognolog. Sac. b. i.
4. Work rising in protuberances.
- The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon's Natural History.
- We take delight in a prospect well laid out, and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fret works of rocks and grottos. Spettator, N^o. 414.
5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of the temper; passion.
- Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
- Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
- Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets,
- As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.
- The incred'ous Pheac, having yet
- Drank but one round, reply'd in sober fret. Tate's Juven.
- You, too weak the slightest loss to bear,
- Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage. Cresci's Juven.
- Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
- I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope, Epistle ii.
- To FRET. v. a. [from fret.]
1. To rub against any thing; to agitate violently.
- You may as well forbid the mountain pines
- To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
- When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.
2. To wear away by rubbing.
- Drop them still upon one place,
- 'Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
- Within the earth. Shakespeare's Richard II.
- In the banks of rivers, with the wailing of the water,
- there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Abbot.
- Before I ground the object metal on the pitch, I always
- ground the putty on it with the concave copper, 'till it had
- done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty
- were not made to flick fast in the pitch, they would, by roll-
- ing up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it
- full of little holes. Newton's Opt.
3. To hurt by attrition.
- The better part with Mary and with Ruth
- Chosen thou hast; and they that over-ween,
- And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
- No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milton.
4. To corrode; to eat away.
- It is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without. Lev. xiii. 55.
- The painful husband, plowing up his ground,
- Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and fields,
- And empty helms under his harrow found. Hakewill.
5. To form into raised work.
- Nor did there want
- Cornice or freeze, with bossy sculptures grav'n;
- The roof was fretted gold. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
6. To variegate; to diversify.
- Yon grey lines,
- That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shak. Jul. Cæs.
7. To make angry; to vex.
- Antony
- Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
- His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
- Of what he has and has not. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
- Because thou hast fretted me in all these things, behold I
- will recompense thy way upon thine head. Ezek. xvi. 43.
- Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass:
- therefore I'll even give it up, and go and fret myself. Collier.
- Injuries from friends fret and gall more, and the memory of
- them is not so easily obliterated. Arbutnot Hist. of John Bull.
- To FRET. v. n.
1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.
- No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or allay that diabol-
- ical rancour, that frets and ferments in some hellish breasts,
- but that upon all occasions it will foam out at its foul mouth
- in slander and invective. South's Sermons.
- Th' adjoining brook, that purls along
- The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
- Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool. Thomf. Summ.
2. To be worn away; to be corroded.
- Take a piece of gloves leather that is very thin, and put
- your gold therein, binding it close, and then hang it up: the
- sal armoniac will fret away, and the gold remain behind. Peacham on Drawing.
3. To make way by attrition.
- These do but indeed scrape off the extuberances, or fret
- into the wood, and therefore they are very seldom used to
- soft wood. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

- Of boys with custard choak'd at Newberry. King.
- FRICTION. n. f. [fricatio, Latin.] The act of rubbing one - thing against another.
- Gentle friction draweth forth the nourishment, by making
- the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this friction I will
- to be done in the morning. Bacon's Natural History.
- Refinuous or unctuous bodies, and such as will flame, attract
- vigorously, and most thereof without friction, as good hard
- wax,

FRI

- wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the
- loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 4.
- FRICTION. n. f. [friction, Fr. fricte, from frico, Latin.]
1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.
- Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and
- especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those
- parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made
- by heat, friction, percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital
- motion? Newton's Opt.
2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body
- upon another.
3. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloaths.
- Frications make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see
- both in men and in the currying of horses; for that they draw
- a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.
- FRI'DAY. n. f. [frige dag, Saxon.] The sixth day of the - week, so named of Freya, a Saxon deity.
- An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday of Flanders. Clarendon, b. viii.

The milk of tygers was his infant food,
Taught from his tender years the taste of blood. Dryden.
Were there, from all eternity, no memorable actions done
'till about that time? Tillotson, Sermon 1.
19. Contrary to.
Any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing;
whose end, both at the first and now, was and is to hold, as
'twere, the mirror up to nature. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Do not believe,
That from the sense of all civility,
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence. Shaksp.
Did you draw bonds to forfeit? Sign, to break?
Or must we read you quite from what we speak,
And find the truth out the wrong way? Donne.
20. Noting removal.
Thrice from the ground she leap'd. Dryden's Æn. b. ii.
21. From is very frequently joined by an ellipsis with adverbs:
as, from above, from the parts above; from below, from the places below; of which some are here exemplified.
22. From above.
He, which gave them from above such power, for miraculous confirmation of that which they taught, endued them also with wisdom from above, to teach that which they so did confirm. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.
No sooner were his eyes in slumber bound,
When, from above, a more than mortal sound
Invades his ears. Dryden's Æn. b. viii.

The train, proceeding on their way,
From far the town and lofty tow'rs survey. Dryden's Æn.
27. From high.
Then heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high. Dryd.
28. From thence. Here from is superfluous.
In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one publick interc't; and from hence have always risen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations. Clarendon.
29. From whence. From is here superfluous.

- While future realms his wand'ring thoughts delight,
His daily vision, and his dream by night,
Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly. Pope's Statius.
30. From where.
From where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendent woods,
Us to these shores our filial duty draws. Pope's Odyssey.
31. From without.
When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant it with women as well as with men, that it may spread into generations, and not be pieced from without. Bacon.
If native power prevail not, shall I doubt
To seek for needful succour from without. Dryden's Æn.
32. From is sometimes followed by another preposition, with its proper case.
33. From amidst.
Thou too shalt fall by time or barb'rous foes,
Whose circling walls the sev'n fam'd hills enclose;
And thou, whose rival tow'rs invade the skies,
And, from amidst the waves, with equal glory rise. Addison.
34. From among.
Here had new begun
My wand'ring, had not he, who was my guide
Up hither, from among the trees appear'd,
Prefence divine! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.
Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North and hyperborean seas,
Terror is thine; and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong. Dryden.
40. From out of.
Whatever such principle there is, it was at the first found out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.
41. From under.
He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under adies into sudden flame. Milton's Agonistes.
42. From within.
From within
The broken bowels, and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms. Dryd. Virg. Geor.
- Fromward*. prep. [from and weaps, Saxon.] Away from;
the contrary to the word wardward.
As cheerfully going towards as Pyrocles went foward fromward his death. Sidney.

convenient to make the frontroom shallow. Mason's Mech. Ex.
- FRÖRE*. adj. [from vroren, Dutch, frozen.] Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton.
The parching air
Burns fröre, and cold performs th' effect of fire. Milt. P. L.
- FRÖRNE*. adj. [from vroren, frozen, Dutch.] Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.
O, my heart-blood is well nigh fröre I feel,
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser's Pastoral.
- FROST*. n. f. [from froste, Saxon.]
1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.
This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good ealy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. Soult's Sermons.
2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.
Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope's Winter.
- FROSTBITTEN*. adj. [from frö and bitten.] Nipped or withered by the frost.
The leaves, gathered somewhat before they are too much frostbitten, make excellent mattresses. Mortimer.
- FROSTED*. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.
The rich brocaded silk unfold,
Where rising flowers grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.
- FROSTILY*. adv. [from frost.]
1. With frost; with excessive cold.
2. Without warmth of affection.
Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. Ben. Johnson.
- FROSTINESS*. n. f. [from frosty.] Cold; freezing cold.
- FROSTNAIL*. n. f. [from frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoe, that it may pierce the ice.
The claws are frait only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew's Cymol.
- FROSTWORK*. n. f. [from frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.
By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and these the gentle breeze. Blackmore.
- FROSTY*. adj. [from frost.]
1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.
The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.
A gnat, half starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.
2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.
What a frosty spirited rogue is this! Shaksp. Henry IV.
3. Hoary; gray-haired; resembling frost.
Where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shak. H. VI.
- FROTH*. n. f. [from free, Danish and Scottish.]
1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.
His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrap the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy flood. Fairy Queens, b. i. cant. 11.
When wind expieth from under the sea, as it causeth some refounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Nat. History.
Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton's Pa. Reg.
The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glazv. Sceps. c. 9.

FRO

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dry.
They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the several bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness.
Newton's Opt.
A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.
3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.
Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tull. Husb.
TO FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.
He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
FROTHILY. adv. [from frothy.]
1. With foam; with spume.
2. In an empty trifling manner.
FROTHY. adj. [from froth.]
1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.
The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.
Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.
2. Soft; not solid; wafting.
Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bacon's Natural History.
3. Vain; empty; trifling.
What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments?
What is it but a mortification, to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange, Fable 185.
Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by falconers for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill.
Skinner and Ainsworth.
TO FROUNCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.
Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 4.
Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin,
or an overflaring frounced head. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
Thus, night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Not trick'd and frounc'd as the was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.
FROUZY. adj. [A cant word.] Dim; foetid; musty.
Petticoats in frouzy heaps,
When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-colour'd red
Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.
FROWARD. adj. [from froward, Saxon.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse: the contrary to toward.
The froward pain of mine own heart made me so delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.
She's not froward, but modest as the dove: Shakespeare.
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn.
Whole ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths.
Prov. ii. 15.
Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon, Essay 25.
'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be froward quitted by fear than by any sense of duty. L'Estrange.
They help or occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles.
Temple.
FROWARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Peevishly; perversely.
I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Is. lvii. 17.

FRU

FRO'WARDNESS. n. s. [from froward.] Peevishness; perversi-ness.
How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother? how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands? South's Sermons.
We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth and frowardness of age. Addis. Cat.
FROWER. n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.
A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Tull. Husb.
TO FROWN. v. a. [from frown, old French, to wrinkle. Skin- ner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.
Say, that the frowns; I'll say, the looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.
They chafe their magistrates;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
How now, daughter, what makes that frownlet on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.
— Thou wait a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Heroes in animated marble frown.
Pope.
The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below. Pope.
FROWN. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.
Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Kneller's History of the Turks.
In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.
FROWNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.
What, look'd he frowningly?
— A countenance more in sorrow than in anger. Shak. Ham.
FROWY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used;
but instead of it frouzy.
But if they with thy gotes should yede,
They foun might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frowy fede,
Or with the weeds be glutted. Spenser's Pastoral.
FROZEN. part. pass. of freeze.
Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair;
but his armour so naturally representing ice, and all his furniture so lively answering thereto, as yet did I never see anything that pleased me better. Sidney, b. ii.
How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd:
What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms;
Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden's Ann.
Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
T' invade the frozen waggon of the North. Dryd. Ovid.
A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire.
Dryden's Flower and Leaf.
F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.
Who this professes,

FRUCTIFEROUS. adj. [from fructifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ains.
TO FRUCTIFY. v. a. [from fructifer, French.] To make fruitful; to fertilize.
The legal levies the fovereign raises, are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Howell's Vocal Forth.
Where e'er she looks, behold some sudden birth
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Graville.
TO FRUCTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.
It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh
the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Haker.
Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
FRUCTIFICATION. n. s. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.
That the lap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath scarcely reason to doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
FRUCTUOUS. adj. [from fructuosus, Fr. from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.
Here to the fight
Apples of price, and plenteous heaves of corn
Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Phillips.
FRUGAL

FRU

FRUGAL. adj. [from frugali, Latin; frugal, Fr.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.
It through mists he shoots his tullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams, Suspect a drilling day. Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.
FRUGALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly;
thriftily.
Mean time young Palmonid his marriage press'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun.
To join his brother's bridal with his own. Dryden.
FRUGALITY. n. s. [from frugali, French; frugalitas, Latin.]
Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.
As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink. Bacon.
Frugality and bounty too,
Those diff'ring virtues, meet in you. Waller.
In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.
The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbutnot's John Bull.
FRUGIFEROUS. adj. [from frugifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ains.
FRUIT. n. s. [from fructus, Latin; frucht, Dutch; fruit, French.]
1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.
The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shakespeare, Henry V.
2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.
By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.
See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own. Blackmore.
3. Production.
The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth. Ez. v. 9.
4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.
Canst thou their reckonings keep? the time compute,
When their swollen bellies shall enlarge their fruit. Sandys.
5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.
What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories?
Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity?
Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man may pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.
6. The effect or consequence of any action.
She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale, when she remembered the fruits of denying. Sidney.
They shall eat of the fruit of their own way. Prov. i. 31.
If I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour. Philipp.
FRUITAGE. n. s. [from fruitage, French.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.
In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines Yield nectar. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
Greedily they pluck'd
The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd. Milton.
What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work? More.
FRUITBEARER. n. s. [from fruit and bearer.] That which produces fruit.
Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FRUITBEARING. adj. [from fruit and bear.] Having the quality of producing fruit.
By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mort. Husbandry.
FRUITER. n. s. [from fruitier, French.] One who trades in fruit.
I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plums and juicy pears augment his gain. Gay.
FRUITERY. n. s. [from fruitier, French.]
1. Fruit collectively taken.
Oft, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ill, an oriental blast
Disastrous flies. Phillips.
2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.
FRUITFUL. adj. [from fruit and full.]
1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of product.
If the continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney, b. ii.
2. Actually bearing fruit.
Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next. Shakespeare.

FRU

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.
Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend
To make this creature fruitful: Shakespeare's King Lear.
Into her womb convey sterility.
I have copied nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful. Gay's Preface to the What d'ye Call it.
4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.
While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys, Addison.
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays.
FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]
1. In such a manner as to be prolifick.
How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal night,
And empty space, did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.
2. Plenteously; abundantly.
You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitful offered. Shakespeare.
FRUITFULNESS. n. s. [from fruitful.]
1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.
Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
2. The quality of being prolifick.
The goddess, present at the match she made,
So blest the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryd. Ovid.
3. Exuberant abundance.
The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like a'd praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
FRUITGROVES. n. s. [from fruit and groves.] Shades, or close plantations of fruit trees.
The faithful slave,
Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,
To tend the fruitgroves? Pope's Odyssey, b. iv.
FRUITION. n. s. [from frui, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.
Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation. Hooker, b. i.
I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
God riches and renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruit on to a stranger leave. Sandys's Paraphrase.
Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists: if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed. Rogers's Sermons.
Wit once, like beauty, without art or dreis,
Naked and unadorn'd, could find success;
'Till by fruition, novelty destroy'd,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd. Granov.
FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing;
having the power of enjoyment.
To what our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven to know how happy we shall be, when there. Boyle.
FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]
1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.
The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless. Raleigh's History.
2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.
O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys to fruitless are;
But let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare. Fairy Queen.
Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither;
Fruitless to me, though fruit be here 't excels. Milt. P. L.
3. Without offspring.
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren scepter in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.
After this fruit curiosity fruitlessly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.
Walking they talk'd, and fruitlessly divin'd
What friend the priests by those words design'd. Dryden.
FRUIT-TIME. n. s. [from fruit and time.] The Autumn; the time for gathering fruit.
FRUITTRER. n. s. [from fruit and tree.] A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.
Lady,

FRY

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops. Shakespeare.
They took strong cities, possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance. Neb. ix. 25.
All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound. Wallr.
FRUMENTA'CIOUS. adj. [from frumentum, Latin.] Made of grain. Diſt.

TO FRUSH. v. a. [from frusher, French.] To break, bruise, or crush. Hammer.
I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be matter of it. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
FRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running towards the heel, in the form of a fork. Farrier's Diſt.
FRUSTRANEUS. adj. [from frustra, Latin.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.
Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so peripetuous, should be so partially man, virtuously and piously disposed, should be so partially and zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it. More's Divine Dialogues.
He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindnesse, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour. South's Sermons.
TO FRUSTRATE. v. a. [from frustrare, Latin; frustrer, Fr.]
1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.
It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate. Hooker, b. i.
I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion, which hath writ me down
After my seeming. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.
Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wife to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milt. P. Lost.
2. To make null; to nullify.
The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances. Spenser.
Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrate the conquest fraudulent. Milton's Par. Reg.
The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed. Atterbury's Sermon.
FRUSTRATE. participial adj. [from the verb.]
1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.
He is drown'd
Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Shakespeare's Tempest.
The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian buſied in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and out consuming the workmen, made the enterprise frustrate. Raleigh's History.
All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design. Dryden's Ovid.
2. Null; void.
Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that, the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.
FRUSTRATION. n. f. [from frustratio, Latin, from frustrare.] Disappointment; defeat.
In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse. South's Sermons.
FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing.
FRUSTRATORY. adj. [from frustrate.] That which makes any procedure void; that which vacates any former process.
Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal. Ayliffe's Par.
FRUSTUM. n. f. [Latin.] A piece cut off from a regular figure. A term of science.
FRY. n. f. [from fros, foam, Danish. Skinner.]
1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.
They come to us, but us love draws;
He swallows us, and never chaws:
By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Donne.
Forthwith the founts and seas, each creek and bays,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals

FUE

Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in sculls, that oft Bank the mid-sea. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry. L'Estrange.
So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans, attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way. Dryd.
2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.
Out of the fry of these rakehell horicboys, growing up in knavery and villany, are their kern continually supplied and maintained. Spenser on Ireland.
I hem before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens founding timbrels sung. Fairy Queen.
Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky. Oldham.
The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt. Collier on Pride.
FRY. n. f. A kind of sieve.
He dresteth the dust from malt, by running it through a fan or fry. Mortimer's Husband y.

TO FRY. v. n.
1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.
2. To suffer the action of fire.
So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryd. Æn.
3. To melt with heat.
Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And, phenix like, in that rich nest they die. Waller.
4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.
Oil of sweet almonds, newly drawn with sugar, and a little spice, spread upon bread toast'd, is an excellent nourisher; but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it. Bacon's Natural History.
Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the hoar,
That course he steer'd. Dryden's Æn.
FRY. n. f. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.
FRYING-PAN. n. f. [from fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is roasted on the fire.
If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the fryingpan into the fire.
We understand by out of the fryingpan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse. L'Estrange.
A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street, for an hour together, with the twinkling of a brass kettle or a fryingpan. Addison's Spectator.
TO FRY. v. a. To put off; to delay by false pretences; to cheat.
It is generally written foe. See Fon.
A hundred mark is a long lone for a poor lone woman to bear; and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been fudd'd off and fudd'd off from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
FUB. n. f. A plump chubby boy.
FUCATED. adj. [from fucatus, Latin.]
1. Painted; disguised with paint.
2. Disguised by false show.
FUCUS. n. f. [Latin.] Paint for the face.

Those who paint for debauchery should have the fucus pulled off, and the coarseness underneath discovered. Collier.
TO FUDGLE. v. a. [Of unknown etymology.] To make drunk.
Earnest brimming bowls
Leave every soul the table floating round,
And pavement faithless to the fuddled feet. Thomson's Autumn
TO FUDGLE. v. n. To drink to excess.
Men, we see, will be whoring and fuddling on still. L'Estr.
FUEL. n. f. [from feu, fire, French.] The matter or aliment of fire.
This shall be with burning and fuel of fire. If. ix. 5.
This spark will prove a raging fire,
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with. Shak. H. VI.
Mov'd by my charms, with them your love may cease;
And as the fuel sinks, the flame decreas'd. Pri. r.
TO FUEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To feed fire with combustible matter.
And yet the cannot waste by this,
Nor long endure this torturing wrong;
For more corruption needful is,
To fuel such a fever long. Donne.
Never,

FUG

Never, alas! the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame Cowley.
The fuel'd chimney blazes wide. Thomson's Autumn.
2. To rore with firing.

FUGACITY. n. f. [from fugax, Latin.]
1. Volatility; quality of flying away.
Spirits and salts, which, by their fugacity, colour, smell, taste, and divers experiments that I purposely made to examine them, were like the salt and spirit of urine and foot. Boyle.
2. Uncertainty; instability.
FUGA. intery. [perhaps from Φεύω.] An expression of abhorrence.
A very filthy fellow: how odiously he smells of his country garlic! fuge, how he stinks of Spain! Dryd. Don Sebastian.
FUGITIVE. adj. [from fugit, French; fugitivus, Latin.]
1. Not tenable; not to be held or detained.
Our idea of infinity is a growing and fugitive idea, still in a boundless progression, that can stop no where. Locke.
Happines, object of that waking dream,
Which we call life, mistaking: fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.
2. Unsteady; unstable; not durable.
3. Volatile; apt to fly away.
The more tender and fugitive parts, the leaves, of many of the more sturdy vegetables, fall off for want of the supply from beneath: those only which are more tenacious, making a shift to subsist without such recruit. Woodward's Nat. History.
4. Flying; running from danger.
Whilſt yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,
The fugitive Parthians follow. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
The Trojan chief

Can a fugitive daughter enjoy herself, while her parents are in tears? Clarissa.
6. Wandering; runnagate; vagabond.
It was the most malicious rumour that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician. Watson.
FUGITIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. One who runs from his station or duty.
Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon's Essay 8.
Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
Left with a whip of scorpions I pursue Thy ling'ring. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
We understand by some fugitives that he hath commanded The generals to return with victory, or expect A shameful death. Denham's Sophy.
2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.
There are also in this realm of England too many, which, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives, which are there abiding. Spenser on Ireland.
Your royal highness is too great and too just a monarch either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.
FUGITIVENESS. n. f. [from fugitivus.]
1. Volatility; fugacity.
That divers salts, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartsorn ascending in distillation. Boyle.
2. Instability; uncertainty.
FUGUE. n. f. [French, from fuga, Latin.] In musick, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same, or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner, the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harris.
The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The skillful organist plies his grave and fancied delciant in lofty fugues; or through the whole symphony artful and unimaginable touches adorn and grace the well-studied chords of some choice composer. Milton on Education.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,

FUL

Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milt. P. L.
Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In fongs and airs exprets their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.
FULCIMENT. n. f. [from fulcimen, fulcimentum, Latin.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever.
The power that equiponderates with any weight, must have the same proportion unto it as there is betwixt their several distances from the center or fulciment. Wilkins.
TO FULFIL. v. a. [from ful and fill.]
1. To fill till there is no room for more. This sense is now not used.
Six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,
And correlative and fulfilling bolts,
Sparre up the sons of Troy. Shak. Troil. and Cressida, Prolog.
2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.
They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. Acts xiii. 27.
The fury bath'd them in each other's blood;
Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting flies,
And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies. Dryden's Æn.
3. To answer any purpose or design.
Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends. Milt. P. Lost.
4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.
If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,
Think for whole sake my breast that wound did bear;
And faithfully my last desires fulfill,
As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden's Ovid.
5. To answer any law by obedience.
Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. Ro. xiii. 10.
This I my glory account,
My exaltation, and my whole delight,
That thou in me well-pleas'd, declar'st thy will Fulfill'd, which to fulfill is all my bliss. Milton's Par. Lost.
FULFRAUGHT. adj. [from ful and fraught.] Fully stored.
Thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the fulfraught man, the best endu'd,
With some suspicion. Shakespeare's Henry V.
FULGENCY. n. f. [from fulgens, Latin.] Splendour; glitter. Diſt.
FULGENT. adj. [from fulgens, Latin.] Shining; dazzling; exquisitely bright.

Better is an handful with quietness than both the hands full with travel and vexation of spirit. Ecl. iv. 6.
2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.
With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.
You should tread a course
Pretty and full of view. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; for they taint business through want of secrecy, and they export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon, Essay 49.
In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,
9 Y
I turn'd

FUL

- I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,
Though full of youthful health and void of pain. Dryden.
He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compass'd about with infirmities which he cannot remove. Tillotson's Sermon.
From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his fire,
And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;
Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Granville.
3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing.
Full of days was he; Tickell.
Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see.

Water digesteth a full meal sooner than any other liquor.
8. Complete; such as that nothing further is desired or wanted.
That day had seen the full accomplishment
Of all his travels. Daniel's Civil War.
Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered. Hammond's Praet. Catechism.
The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life. Tillotson's Sermon 5.
9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.
At the end of two full years Pharaoh dream'd. Genesis.
After hard riding plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies. Swift's Direct. to the Groom.
10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.
Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or my art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him hath left upon my thoughts. Denham.
Should a man go about with never so set study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words, so fit and proper, so full and express. Woodward.
11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.
I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart;
but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest found. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber, make all noises in the fame more full and rebounding. Bacon's Nat. History.
Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full rebounding line. Pope.
12. Mature; perfect.
In the sultanry of the Mamelukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of their possessions. Bacon's Holy War.
13. [Applied to the moon.] Complete in its orb.
Towards the full moon, as he was coming home one morning, he felt his legs faulter. Wijeman's Surgery.
14. Noting the conclusion of any matter, or a full stop.
Therewith he ended, making a full point of a hearty sigh. Sidney.
15. Spread to view in all dimensions.
'Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile. Addison on Medals.
FULL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.
When we return,
We'll see those things effected to the full. Shak. Henry VI.
He liked the pomp and absolute authority of a general well, and preserved the dignity of it to the full. Clarendon, b. viii.
The picture of Ptolemy Philopater is given by the foremen-tioned authors to the full. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.
Sicilian tortures and the brazen bull,
Are emblems, rather than express the full
Of what he feels. Dryden's Pers. Sat. iii.
If where the rules not far enough extend,
Some lucky licence answer to the full
Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule. Pope's Criticism.
2. The highest state or degree.
The swan's down feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
Neither way inclines. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
3. The whole; the total.
The king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy pow'r to encounter you, my lord:
This is the news at full. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FUL

- But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
I knowing all my peril, thou no art. Shakespeare.
4. The state of being full.
When I had fed them to the full. Jer. v. 7.
5. [Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.
Brains in rabbits, woodcocks, and calves, are fullest in the full of the moon. Bacon's Natural History.
FULL. adv.
1. Without abatement.
In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; for many of their critics limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin. Dryden's Dramatick Poesy.
A modest blush he wears, not form'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart. Dryden.
The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critic, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived. Dryden's Aurengz. Preface.
Since you may
Suspect my courage, if I should not lay,
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryd. Virg. Pag.
2. With the whole effect.
'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it. Dryden's Duffresnay.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.
3. Exactly.
Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Addison on Italy.
Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,
A whole of nineteen dolphins round her play. Addis. Ovid.
4. Directly.
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.
He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Dryden.
At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse. Dryden's En.
5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their signification.
Why on your field, so goodly scor'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead. F. & J.
I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Full well ye reject the commandment. Mar. vii. 9.
Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself. More's Divine Dialogues.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight. Dryden.
Full well the god his sister's envy knew,
And what her aims and what her arts pursue. Dryden.
There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself. Swift.
FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.
FULL-BLOWN. adj. [full and blown.]
1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.
My glories are past danger; they're full-blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud. Denb. Sophy.
My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space! Dryden's Juven.
2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.
He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryd. Pers. Sat.
FULL-BOTTOMED. adj. [full and bottom.] Having a large bottom.
I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having paw'd a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottomed wig for a sum of money. Guardian, No. 166.
FULL-EARED. [full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.
As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-eared corn, or torrents raging cour'd. Denham.
FULL-EYED. [full and eye.] Having large prominent eyes.
FULL-FED. [full and fed.] Sated; fat; faginated.
All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-bodied air. Pope's Dunciad.
FULL-LADEN. [full and laden.] Laden 'till there can be no more.
It were unfit that so excellent a reward as the Gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand. Tillotson's Sermon.

FULL-SPREAD.

FUL

- FULL-SPREAD. [full and spread.] Spread to the utmost extent.
How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that 'gainst stiff gales lavinger go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too. Dryden.
FULL-SUMMED. [full and summ'd.] Complete in all its parts.
The time was that the cedar stretched forth his imperial branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and that the king of birds nest'd within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons East and West;
but now the eagle is become half naked. Howell's 1st Ec. Forest.
To FULL. v. a. [fullo, Latin.] To cleanse cloth from its oil or grease.
FULLAGE. n. f. [from full.] The money paid for fulling or cleansing cloth.
FULLER. n. f. [fullo, Latin.] One whose trade is to cleanse cloth.
The clothiers have put off
The spinsters, carders, fulers, weavers. Shakespeare's H. VIII.
His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whiten them. Mar. ix. 3.
FULLERS EARTH. n. f.
Fullers earth is a marl of a close texture, extremely soft and unctuous to the touch: when dry it is of a greyish brown colour, in all degrees, from very pale to almost black, and generally has something of a greenish cast in it. The finest fullers earth is dug in our own island. Hill's Mat. Medica.
The fuller's earth of England is very various, and it very much exceeds any yet discovered abroad in goodness; which is one great reason why the English surpass all other nations in the woollen manufacture. Woodward on Fossils.
FULLERY. n. f. [from fuller.] The place where the trade of a fuller is exercised.
FULLING-MILL. n. f. [full and mill.] A mill where the water raises hammers which beat the cloth 'till it be cleaned.
By large hammers, like those used for paper and fulling-mills, they beat their hemp. Mortimer.
FULLY. adv. [from full.]
1. Without vacuity.
2. Completely; without lack; without more to be desired.
There are many graces for which we may not cease hourly to sue, graces which are in bestowing always, but never come to be fully had in this present life; and therefore, when all things here have an end, endless thanks must have their beginning in a state which bringeth the full and final fatisfaction of all such perpetual desires. Hooker, b. v. f. 43.
He fully possessed the entire revelation he had received from God, and had thoroughly digested it. Locke.
The goddess cry'd
It's enough, I'm fully satisfy'd. Addison's Ovid's Metam.
FULMINANT. adj. [fulminans, Fr. fulminans, Latin.] Thundering; making a noise like thunder.
TO FULMINATE. v. n. [fulmino, Lat. fulminare, French.]
1. To thunder.
2. To make a loud noise or crack.
Whilst it was in fusion we cast into it a live coal, which presently kindled it, and made it boil and flash for a pretty while: after which we cast in another glowing coal, which made it fulminate afresh. Boyle.
In damps one is called the suffocating, and the other the ful-minating damp. Woodward's Natural History.
3. To issue out ecclesiastical censures.
To FULMINATE. v. a. To throw out as an object of terror.
As excommunication is not greatly regarded here in England, as now fulminated; so this constitution is out of use among us in a great measure. Ayliffe's Parergon.
FULMINATION. n. f. [fulminatio, Latin; fulmination, French, from fulminate.]
1. The act of thundering.
2. Denunciations of censure.
The fulminations from the vatican were turned into ridicule. Ayliffe's Parergon.
FULMINATORY. adj. [fulminatus, Latin; from fulminate.]
Thundering; striking horror.
FULNESS. n. f. [from full.]
1. The state of being filled so as to have no part vacant.
Your heave-offering shall be reckoned the fulness of the wine-press. Numb. xviii. 27.
To the houses I wish'd nothing more than safety, fulness, and freedom. King Charles.
2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.
3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.
Your enjoyments are so complete, I turn wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness only with their continuance. South.
4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.
The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclama-tions and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and unfeigned, as might well appear in the very demonstrations and fulness of the cry. Bacon's Henry VII.

FUM

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as the;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. Shakespeare's K. John.
6. Repletion; satiety.
I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
7. Plenty; wealth.
To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lie for need; and fallhood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.
A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon's Essay 28.
9. Largeness; extent.
There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.
10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour.
This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.
FULSOME. adj. [from fulle, Saxon, foul.]
1. Nauseous; offensive.
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands;
And in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.
He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.
Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to stay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home? Ottway's Orphan.
2. Of a rank odious smell.
White satyrion is of a dainty smell, and bean-flowers:
again, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 507.
3. Tending to obscenity.
A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.
FULSOMELY. adv. [from fulsome.] Nauseously; rankly; ob-scenely.
FULSOMENESS. n. f. [from fulsome.]
1. Nauseousness.
2. Rank smell.
3. Obscenity.
No decency is considered, no fulsomeness is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as dulness can supply it. Dryden.
FUMADO. n. f. [fumus, Latin.] A smoked fish.
Fish that serve for the hotter countries, they used at first to fume, by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, drying them with the smoke of a soft and continual fire, from which they purchased the name of fumadnes. Cervus.
FUMAGE. n. f. [from fumus, Latin.] Hearthmoney. Ditt.
FUMATORY. n. f. [fumaria, Lat. fumetors, Fr.] See FUMITORY.
It hath divided leaves resembling those of the umbelliferous plants: the flowers, which are collected into a spike, are of an anomalous figure, somewhat resembling a papilionaceous flower, consisting of two petals or leaves, open like two lips, the upper lip ending in a spur: the footstalk is joined to the middle part of the flower: the fruit is either of a long or a round figure, which is like a pod. Miller.
Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumatory,
Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
TO FUMBLE. v. n. [fommelen, Dutch.]
1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.
Our mechanick thefts will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.
2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.
Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To play childishly.
I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakespeare's Henry V.
TO FUMBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.
As many farewells as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shakespeare.
His greasy bald-pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the heads, in such an agony,
They told 'em false for fear. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
FUMBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.
FUMBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.
FUME. n. f. [fume, French; fumus, Latin.]
1. Smoke.

Thus

FUM

- Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
But freight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fumes,
And o'er the breach in uncluous vapours fly. Dryden.
2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.
Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare.
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.
In Winter, when the heat without is less, it becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward's Natural History.
3. Exhalation from the stomach.
The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South's Sermons.
Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden's Pers. Sat.
Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprize,
And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden's Aurel.
4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.
The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.
5. Any thing unsubstantial.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.
Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon these things below, than indeed they have, but in gross.
Bacon, Essay 59.
To lay aside all that may seem to have a shew of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon's War with Spain.
- TO FUME, v. n. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]
1. To smoke.
Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd,
By their great intercessor; came in sight.
Before the Father's throne. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryd. En.
Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as the sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.
2. To vapour; to yield exhalations.
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Silenus lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Rescommon.
3. To pass away in vapours.
We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning;
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race
Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The sluggish sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson's Spring.
4. To be in a rage.
When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan;
He frets, he fumes, he flares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamorous rings around. Dryden.
- TO FUME, v. a.
1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.
Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.
2. To perfume with odours in the fire.
She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came,
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryden.
The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlick, or other unflavoury things, will drive moles out of the ground. Mortim.
3. To disperse in vapours.
The heat will fume away most of the scent. Mortimer.
- FUMETTE, n. f. [french.] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.
A haunch of ven'ison made her sweet,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift.
- FUMID, adj. [fumidus, Latin.] Smoky; vaporous.

FUN

- A crafts and fumid exhalation is caused from the combat of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquafortis. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.
- FUMIDITY, n. f. [from fumid.] Smokiness; tendency to smoke. DiA.
- TO FUMIGATE, v. n. [from fumus, Latin; fumiger, Fr.]
1. To smoke; to perfume by smoke or vapour.
Wouldst thou preserve thy family'd family,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state. Dryden's Virg.
2. To medicate or heal by vapours.
FUMIGATION, n. f. [fumigatio, Latin; fumigation, French;
from fumigare.]
1. Scents raised by fire.
Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbuthnot.
My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:
And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood. Dryden.
2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.
FUMINGLY, adv. [from fume.] Angriily; in a rage.
That which we move for our better learning and instruction fake, turneth unto anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fuming, that they are athamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
- FUMITER, n. f. See FUMATORY.
Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vext sea; finging aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds. Shakespeare.
- FUMOUS, adj. [fumeux, French; from fume.] Producing fumes.
- From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fume god out from his breast:
E'en then he dreamt of drink and lucky play;
More lucky had it lasted till the day. Dryden's Hen.
- FUN, n. f. [A low cant word.] Sport; high merriment; frolicksome delight.
Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. Moore.
- FUNCTION, n. f. [functio, Latin.]
1. Discharge; performance.
There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.
2. Employment; office.
The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.
You have paid the heav'n's your function, and the prisoner
the very debt of your calling. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Nor was it any policy of state, or obliquity of will, or partiality of affection either to the men or their function, which fixed me. King Charles.
This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. Single act of any office.
Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort,
be executed. Hooker.
They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. lull.
4. Trade; occupation.
Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakespeare.
5. Office of any particular part of the body.
The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.
6. Power; faculty.
Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function luting
With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be wick them that rest.
Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination ples her dangerous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part.
Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbuthnot.
- FUND, n. f. [fond, French; fundus, a bag, Latin.]
1. Stock; capital; that by which any expence is supported.
He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

FUN

- Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the watry tide. Dryden.
- In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the flock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.
2. Stock or bank of money.
As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Add.
- FUNDAMENT, n. f. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.
FUNDAMENTAL, adj. [fundamentalis, Lat. from fundament.]
Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built;
essential; important; not merely accidental.
Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh's Essays.
- You that will be less fearful than disrepute,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift's Examiner.
- Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life. Watts.
- Such we find they are, as can controul
The fervile actions of our wav'ring soul,
Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill.
Yet some there were among the founder few,
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope on Criticism.
- FUNDAMENTAL, n. f. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.
We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those superstructures and consequences that arise from them. South's Sermons.
- It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.
- FUNDAMENTALLY, adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially;
originally.
As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspectively in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Greav.
Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.
- The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift on the Diff. in Ath. and Rome.
- FUNERAL, n. f. [funus, Latin; funerarius, French.]
1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.
Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
Come I to speak in Caesar's funeral. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
All things that we ordain'd festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral.
He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Mac. v. 10.
- No widow at his funeral shall weep.
2. The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.
The long funerals blacken all the way. Pope.
You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift's Directions to the Chambermaid.
3. Burial; interment.
May he find his funeral
P' th' sands, when he before his day shall fall. Denham.
- FUNERAL, adj. Used at the ceremony of interring the dead.
Our instruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast. Shak. R. and Jul.
Let such honours
And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues
Are due, be first perform'd.
Thy hand o'er towns the funeral torch displays,
And forms a thousand ills ten thousand ways. Dryden.
- FUNERAL, adj. [funerarius, Latin.] Suited a funeral; dark; dismal.
But if his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Inhabitant of deep disastrous night,
Homeward with pious speed repairs the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.
- FUNGOSITY, n. f. [from fungus.] Unfold excrecence. DiA.
- FUNGOUS, adj. [from fungus.] Excrecent; spongy; wanting firmness.
It is often employed to keep down the fungus lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the echarotick medicines. Sharp's Surgery.

FUR

- FUNGUS, n. f. [Latin.] Strictly a mushroom: a word used to express such excrecences of flesh as grow out upon the lips of wounds, or any other excrecence from trees or plants not naturally belonging to them; as the agarick from the larchtree, and auricula judæ from elder. Quincy.
The surgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce fungus, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot on Diet.
- FUNICLE, n. f. [funiculus, Latin.] A small cord; a small ligature; a fibre.
FUNICULAR, adj. [funiculaire, Fr. from funicle.] Consisting of a small cord or fibre.
FUNK, n. f. A stink. A low word.
FUNNEL, n. f. [infundibulum, Latin; whence fundible, funnel, funnel.]
1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundish.
If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend; Blackm.
The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel. Ray on the Creation.
2. A pipe or passage of communication.
Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air. Addison.
- FUR, n. f. [fourure, French.]
1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth, or covered for ornament.
December must be expressed with a horrid and fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of Capricorn. Peacocks on Drawing.
'Tis but dressing up a bird of prey in his cap and furs to make a judge of him. L'Estrange.
And lordly gout wrapt up in fur,
And wheezing asthma, loth to stir. Swift.
2. Soft hair of beasts found in cold countries, where nature provides coats suitable to the weather; hair in general.
This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbonnetted he runs,
And bids what will take all. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Such animals as feed upon flesh qualify it, the one by swallowing the hair or fur of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with. Ray on the Creation.
3. Any moisture exhaled to such a degree as that the remainder sticks on the part.
Methinks I am not right in ev'ry part;
I feel a kind of trembling at my heart:
My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;
Besides a filthy fur upon my tongue. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 3.
- TO FUR, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To line or cover with skins that have soft hair.
How mad a sight it was to see Dametas, like rich tissue fur'd with lambkins? Sidney, b. ii.
Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;
Robes and fur'd gowns hide all. Shakespeare's King Lear.
You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;
You fur your gloves with reasons. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cress.
2. To cover with soft matter.
To make lampblack, take a torch and hold it under the bottom of a latten basin; and, as it groweth to be fur'd and black within, strike it with a feather into some shell. Peacocks.
The filters, mourning for their brother's loss,
Their bodies hid in bark, and fur'd with moss. Dryden.
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry fur'd tongues. Phillips.
A dungeon wide and horrible; the walls
On all sides fur'd with mouldy damps, and hung
With clots of rosy gore. Addison.
- FUR, adv. [It is now commonly written far.] At a distance.
The white lovely dove
Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,
Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur. Sidney.
- FUR-WROUGHT, adj. [fur and wrought.] Made of fur.
Silent along the mazy margin stray,
And with the fur-wrought fly delude the prey. Gay's Post.
- FURACIOUS, adj. [furax, Latin.] Thievish; inclined to steal. DiA.
- FURACITY, n. f. [from furax, Latin.] Disposition to theft;
thievishness. DiA.
- FUR-BELOW, n. f. [fur and below.] Fur sewed on the lower part of the garment; an ornament of dress.
Nay, oft in dreams invention we bestow
To change a flounce, or add a furbelow. Pope.

FUR

To FURBLOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with ornamental appendages of dress.

When arguments too fiercely glare,
You calm them with a milder air;
To break their points, you turn their force,
And furbelow the plain discourse. Prior.
She was flounced and furbelowed from head to foot; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 129.

To FURBISH. v. a. [from fourbir, French.] To burnish; to polish; to rub to brightness.

It may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furbish new the name of John o' Gaunt. Shak. R. II.
Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines. Jer. xlv. 4.
Some others who furbish up and reprint his old errors, hold that the sufferings of the damned are not to be, in a strict sense, eternal; but that, after a certain period of time, there shall be a general gaol-delivery of the souls in prison, and that not for a farther execution, but a final release. South's Sermon.

As after Numa's peaceful reign,
The martial Ancus did the sceptre wield;
Furbish'd the rusty sword again,
Refum'd the long-forgotten shield. Dryden.
And led the Latins to the dusty field.
Inferior ministers, for Mars repair
His broken axle-tree, and blunted war;
And fend him forth again, with furbish'd arms. Dryden.

FURBISHER. n. s. [from fourbir, French, from furbish.] One who polishes any thing.

FURCA'TION. n. s. [from furca, Latin.] Forkinels; the state of shooting two ways like the blades of a fork.

When they grow old they grow less branched, and first do lose their brow-antlers, or lowest furcations next the head.

FURFUR. n. s. [Latin.] Husk or chaff, scurf or dandruff, that grows upon the skin, with some likeness to bran. Quincy.

2. Raging; violent; transported by passion beyond reason.

Who can be wife, amaz'd, temperate and furiosus,
Loyal and neutral in a moment? No man. Shaksp. Macb.

To be furiosus,
Is to be frighted out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopat.

FURIOUSLY. adv. [from furiosus.] Madly; violently; vehemently.

Which when his brother saw, fraught with great grief
And wrath, he to him leapt furiously. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

They observe countenance to attend the practice; and this carries them on furiously to that which of themselves they are inclined.

She heard not half, so furiously she flies;
Fear gave her wings. Dryden.

FURIOUSNESS. n. s. [from furiosus.] Frenzy; madness; transport of passion.

To FURL. v. a. [from friser, French.] To draw up; to contract.

When fortune sends a stormy wind,
Then shew a brave and present mind;
And when with too indulgent gales
She swells too much, then furl thy sails. Creech.

FURLONG. n. s. [from farlang, Saxon.] A measure of length; the eighth part of a mile.

If a man stand in the middle of a field and speak aloud, he shall be heard a furlong in round, and that in articulate sounds.

Coming within a few furlongs of the temple, they passed through a very thick grove. Addison's Freeholder.

FURLOUGH. n. s. [from verloof, Dutch.] A temporary dismissal from military service; a licence given to a soldier to be absent.

Brutus and Cato might discharge their souls,
And give them furlo's for another world;
But we, like sentries, are oblig'd to stand

In starless nights, and wait th' appointed hour. Dryden.

FURMENTY. n. s. [More properly frumenty, or frumentum, Latin.] Food made by boiling wheat in milk.

Remember, wife, therefore, though I do it not,
The feed-cake, the paffies, and furmenty pot. Tuff. Husb.

FURNACE. n. s. [from furnus, Latin.] An inclosed fireplace.

Heat not a furnace for your foe too hot
That it may singe yourself. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

The firing pot is for silver and the furnace for gold. Prov.
We have also furnaces of great diversities, that keep great diversity of heats.

The kings of Spain have erected divers furnaces and forges, for the trying and firing of their gold. Abbo.

Who's falsest not down and worshippeth, shall the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace. Dan.

A dungeon horrible, on all sides around,
As one great furnace, flam'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

The thick fighs from him. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

To FURNISH. v. a. [from fournir, French.]

1. To supply with what is necessary.

How I shall take her from her father's house;
What gold and jewels she is furnish'd with. Shaksp. Lear.

That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
And never seek for aid out of himself. Shak. Henry VIII.

Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock. Deut. xv.

Auria, having driven the Turks from Corone, both by sea and land, furnish'd the city with corn, wine, victual, and powder.

Come, thou stranger, and furnish a table, and feed me of that thou hast ready. Ecclef. xxix. 26.

I shall not need to heap up instances; every one's reading and conversation will sufficiently furnish him, if he wants to be better stored. Locke.

2. To give things for use.

These simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested and furnish'd to the mind only by these two ways, sensation and reflection. Locke.

It is not any action of the state, but a compact among private persons that hath furnish'd out these several remittances. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

3. To fit up; to fit with appendages.

Whereof perchance these are but furnishings. Shaksp. Lear.

Plato entertained some of his friends at dinner, and had in the chamber a bed or couch, neatly and costly furnish'd. Diogenes came in, and got up upon the bed, and trampled it, saying, I trample upon the pride of Plato. Plato mildly answered, But with greater pride, Diogenes. Bacon's Apophth.

We were led into another great room, furnish'd with old inscriptions. Addison on Italy.

4. To equip; to fit out for any undertaking.

Will your lordship lend me a thousand pounds to furnish me? Shaksp. Henry IV. p. i.

The wounded arm would furnish all their rooms,
And bleed for ever scarlet in the looms. Hallifax.

FURNISHER. n. s. [from fournir, French, from furnish.] One who supplies or fits out.

FURNITURE. n. s. [from fourniture, Fr. from furnish.]

1. Moveables; goods put in a house for use or ornament.

No man can transport his large retinue, his sumptuous fare, and his rich furniture into another world. South's Sermon.

There are many noble palaces in Venice: their furniture is not commonly very rich, if we except the pictures from the hands of the best masters. Addison.

2. Appendages.

By a general conflagration mankind shall be destroyed, with the form and all the furniture of the earth. Tillotson.

3. Equipage; embellishments; decorations.

Young Clarion, with vauntful lustyhed,
After his guise did cast abroad to fare,
And thereto 'gan his furnitures prepare. Spenser.

The duke is coming: see, the barge be ready,
And fit it with such furniture as suits
The greatness of his person. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

The ground must be of a mixt brown, and large enough, or the horse's furniture must be of very sensible colours. Dryd.

FURRIER. n. s. [from fur.] A dealer in furs.

FURROW. n. s. [from fur, Saxon.]

1. A small trench made by the plow for the reception of seed.

Wheat must be sowed above furrow before Michaelmas. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Then ploughs for seed the fruitful furrows broke,
And oxen labour'd first beneath the yoke. Dryden's Ovid.

2. Any long trench or hollow: as a wrinkle.

My lord it is, though time has plow'd that face
With many furrows since I saw it first;
Yet I'm too well acquainted with the ground quite to forget it. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

FURROW-WEED. n. s. [from furrow and weed.] A weed that grows in furrowed land.

Crown'd with rank fumiter, and furrow-weeds. Shaksp.

To FURTHER. v. a. [from the adverb; forðþian, Saxon.] To put onward; to forward; to promote; to countenance; to assist; to help.

Things thus set in order, in quiet and rest,
Shall farther thy harvest, and pleasure thee best. Tuff. Husb.

Could their fond superstition have farthered to great attempts, without the mixture of a true persuasion concerning the irresistible force of divine power. Hooker, b. v. f. i.

Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked; farther not his wicked device. Pf. cxi. 8.

This binds thee then to farther my design,
As I am bound by vow to farther thine. Dryden.

FURTHERANCE. n. s. [from farther.] Promotion; advancement; help.

The Gauls learned them first, and used them only for the furtherance of their trade and private business. Spenser.

Our diligence must search out all helps and fartherances of direction, which scriptures, councils, fathers, histories, the laws and practices of all churches afford. Hooker.

For gain and work, and success in his affairs, he seeketh fartherance of him that hath no manner of power. Hooker.

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Treat you to your wonted fartherance? Shak. Henry VI.

If men were minded to live righteously, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design, but very much for the advancement and fartherance of it. Till.

FURTHERER. n. s. [from farther.] Promoter; advancer.

That earnest favourer and fartherer of God's true religion, that faithful servitor to his prince and country. Alcham.

FURTHERMORE. [from farther and more.] Moreover; besides.

This ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so, I pray you, tell him: farthermore,
I pray you, shew my youth old Shylock's house. Shaksp.

FURTIVE. adj. [from furtivus, Fr. furtivus, Latin.] Stolen; gotten by theft.

Or do they, as your schemes, I think, have shown,
Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,
All servants to that source of light, the sun? Prior.

FURUNCLE. n. s. [from furunculus, Fr. furunculus, Latin.] A bile; an angry pustule.

A furuncle is in its beginning round, hard, and inflamed; and as it increaseth, it riseth up with an acute head, and sometimes a pustule; and then it is more inflamed and painful, when it arrives at its state, which is about the eighth or ninth day. Wifeman's Surgery.

FURY. n. s. [from furor, Latin; furor, French.]

1. Madness.

2. Rage; passion of anger; tumult of mind approaching to madness.

I do oppose my patience to his fury; and am arm'd
To suffer with a quietness of spirit

The very tyranny and rage of his. Shaksp. Mer. of Venice.

He hath given me to know the natures of living creatures, and the furies of wild beasts. Wisd. vii. 20.

3. Enthusiasm; exaltation of fancy.

Taking up the lute, her wit began to be with a divine fury inspired; and her voice would, in so beloved an occasion, second her wit. Sidney, b. ii.

A fable, that had number'd in the world
The sun to course two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury few'd the work. Shaksp. Othello.

Greater than human kind the fool'd to look,
And with an accent more than mortal spoke;
Her staring eyes with sparkling fury roll,
When all the god came rushing on her soul. Dryden's Zen.

4. [From furio, Latin.] One of the deities of vengeance, and thence a storm, turbulent, violent, raging woman.

The fight of any of the house of York,
Is as a fury to torment my foul. Shaksp. Henry VI. p. iii.

FUS

It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every reader's imagination is pleas'd, when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

FURZE. n. s. [from fur, Saxon.] Gorse; goss.

The whole plant is very thorny: the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds. The species are three, each of which grow wild on the heaths and upland-commons in England: the first is sometimes used to make hedges, for which purpose it will do very well for a few years. Milner.

Carry out gravel to fill up a hole,
Both timber and furzin, the turf and the cole. Tuff. Husb.

For fewel, there groweth generally in all parts great store of furze, of which the shrubby sort is called tame, and the better grown French. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

From hence uncertain seasons we may know,
And when to reap the grain, and when to sow,
Or when to fell the furzes. Dryden's Virg. Georg.

FURZY. adj. [from furze.] Overgrown with furze; full of gorse.

Wide through the furzy field their route they take,
Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake. Gay.

To FUSE. v. n. To be melted; to be capable of being liquified by heat.

FUSEE. n. s. [from fuseau, French.]

1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. A firelock [from fusil, Fr.], a small neat musquet. This is more properly written fusil.

FUSEE of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds. Harri.

FUSEE. Track of a buck. Answer.

FUSIBLE. adj. [from fusile.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones. Boyle.

FUSIBILITY. n. s. [from fusibile.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use. Watson's Architecture.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.

FUSIL. adj. [from fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.]

1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought
Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Some, less skilful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothick buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble. Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat.

Perpetual flames,
O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Phillips.

FUSIL. n. s. [from fusil, French.]

1. A firelock; a small neat musquet.

2. [In heraldry, from fusus, Latin.] Something like a spindle.

FUSTIAN. n. f. [futaine, French, from fuste, a tree, because cotton grows on trees.]
1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.
Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings? Shakespeare.
2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.
Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustian. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.
What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn. Dryden.
I am much deceived if this be not abominable fustian; that is, thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other. Dryden's Spanish Fryar, Dedication.
Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the close,
Of rise to fustian, or descend to prose. Smith.

FUSTIAN. adj. [from the noun.]
1. Made of fustian.
2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid. Used of file.

When men argue, th' greatest part
Of th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument. Hudibras, p. i. can. 3.
Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylvæ, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FUSTIC. n. f. A sort of wood brought from the West-Indies, used in dying of cloth. Dict.

TO FUSTIGATE. v. a. [fustigo, Latin.] To beat with a stick; to cane. Dict.

FUSTILARIAN. n. f. [from fusty.] A low fellow; a flunkard; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakespeare only.
Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilarian: I'll tickle your catastrophe. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FUSTINESS. n. f. [from fusty.] Mouldiness; stink.

FUSTY. adj. [from fust.] Ill smelling; mouldy.
Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. Shakespeare's Troilus and Crisida.
The fusty plebeians hate thine honours. Shak. Coriolan.
The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shakespeare.

FUTILE. adj. [futiles, French; futiles, Latin.]
1. Talkative; loquacious.
One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal. Bacon.
2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

FUTILITY. n. f. [futiles, French, from futiles.]
1. Talkativeness; loquacity.
This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour. L'Estrange.
2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

FY

Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects. Bentley.

FUTTOCKS. n. f. [corrupted from foot books. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FUTURE. adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] That which will be hereafter; to come; as, the future state.
Glory they sung to the most High! good will
To future men, and in their dwellings peace. Milt. P. L.
He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,
And sings the future people from his hand. Addison's Ovid.

FUTURE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Time to come; something to happen hereafter.
Thy letters have transported me beyond
Th' ignorant present time; and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

FUTURELY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.
This preference of God, as it is preference, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding; neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.

FUTURITION. n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; of being to come to pass hereafter.
Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no? South's Sermons.

FUTURITY. n. f. [from future.]
1. Time to come; events to come.
Not my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me. Shakespeare's Othello.
All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the light of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.
I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.
This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope's Statius.

2. The state of being to be; futurity.
It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate and intent mind, as, it may be, is no where found but among the platonic ideas. Glanv. Scen. c. 10.

TO FUZZ. v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.

FUZZBALL. n. f. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

FY. interj. [fy, French and Flemish; φύ, Greek; vab, Lat.] A word of blame and disapprobation.
And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wrecks themselves do now allay. Pa. Queen.
Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
A bawd, fir, fy upon him! Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou dost stray!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.
Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.
Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaities. Tatler, N°. 54.

G.

GAD

Has two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a preface somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, e, u, i, r; as, gate, go, gull.
The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of g, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before b; as, might. The Saxon g, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GABARDINE. n. f. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.
My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabout. Shakespeare's Tempest.
You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
The knight did straight submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:
Next he did bro'd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras, b. i.

GA'BBLE. v. n. [gabbare, Italian; gabberen, Dutch.]
1. To make an inarticulate noise.
When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempests roar,
With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shoar. Dryden.
2. To prate loudly without meaning.
Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudibras, p. i.

Such a rout, and such a rattle,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GA'BBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.
Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shak. All's well that ends well.
2. Loud talk without meaning.
Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

GA'BBLER. n. f. [from gabble.] A prater; a chattering fellow.

GA'BBLE. n. f. [gabbele, French; gabbello, Italian; gapel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.
The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, and tobacco. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

GABION. n. f. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.
His battery was defended all along with gabions, and castles filled with sand. Kneller's History of the Turks.

GA'BLE. n. f. [gaval, Welsh; gable, French.] The sloping roof of a building.
Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GAD. n. f. [gab, Saxon; gaddur, Islandick, a club.]
1. A wedge or ingot of steel.
Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts of Holland and Flanders, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a stile or graver, [from gab, Saxon, a goad.]

2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a stile or graver, [from gab, Saxon, a goad.]

GAG

I will go get a leaf of brags,
And with a gad of steel will write these words. Shakespeare.

TO GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Juntius from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.
How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?
—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shakespeare's Rom. and Jul.
Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclesiast. xxv. 25.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thronged forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore. Fairfax, b. iv.
Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon, Essay 9.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;
To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.
Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echo's moan. Milton.
A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dryden's Virg.
She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies frights her from her native home,
And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.
Gull 'em with freedom,
And you shall see 'em tofs their tails, and gad
As if the breeze had stung them. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
There's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually flitting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.

GADDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler; one that runs much abroad without business.
A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Ecclesiast. xxvi. 8.

GAD'DINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GADFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, gadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gab, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breeze.
The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swim-eth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bac.

GAGE. n. f. [gage, French.] A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

GAI

- Who, when the flamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory, from him snatcht away. Fairy Queen.
- There I throw my gage
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shakep. Richard II.
- There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shakep. Richard II.
- They from their mothers breasts poor orphans rend,
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandy's Paraphrase.
- I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southern's Oronoko.
- But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou shouldst wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.
- In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments, that gain it silent, are the vouchers and gage of its probability. Locke.
- To GAGE. v. a. [gager, French.]
1. To wager; to depose as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.
Against the which, a moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Drawing near the shore, he found the Turkish merchants making merry upon the main: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knolles's History of the Turks.
 2. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.
We shall see your bearing.
—Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shakep. Merchant of Venice.
- To GA'GGLE. v. n. [gagen, gagelen, Dutch.] To make noise like a goose.
Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 823.
May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice,
And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce. King.
- GAYETY. See GAYETY.
- GAILY. adv. [from gey.]
1. Airily; cheerfully.
 2. Splendidly; pompously; with great show.

of which there are two species. The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste than the smaller sort. They are both brought from the East-Indies; the small kind from China, and the larger from the island of Java, wherewith the people, while it is fresh, by way of spice, season their dishes. The small sort is used with us in medicine as a stomachick, and is an ingredient in almost all bitter infusions and mixtures. Hill.
- GALA'XY. n. f. [γαλαξία; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky.
A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Clarendon.
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky.
If those be stars that paint the galaxy.
We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley's Serm.
- GAL'BANUM. n. f.
We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable; its taste acrid, nauseous and bitterish. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable

GAL

- as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant, whose stalks are about an inch thick, and five or six feet high: its leaves are like the common anise, of a strong smell, and acrid taste; but the flowers, and especially the seeds, much more so. The whole plant abounds with a viscous milky juice, which it yields when wounded, and which soon concretes into substance called galbanum. The plant is frequent in Persia, and in many parts of Africa. Its medicinal virtues are considerable in althmas, coughs, and hysterick complaints. Hill's Materia Medica.
I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Eccles. xxiv. 15.
- GALE. n. f. [gahling, hastily, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.
What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona? Shakespeare.
- Winds
Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton.
- Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.
- GA'LEAS. n. f. [galeasse, French.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns.
The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten gal-leasses. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- GA'LEATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.]
1. Covered as with a helmet.
A galeated eschinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing. Woodward on Effigies.
 2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkhood.
- GAL'EULATE. adj. [from galeus, Latin.] Covered as with a hat.
- GA'LIOT. n. f. [galiotte, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very light and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three paterroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Diet.
- Barbarossa sent before him Dragut and Corsetus, two notable pyrates, with thirty galiots, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered by Sarmentus, and forced again to their galiots. Knolles's History of the Turks.
- GALL. n. f. [zeala, Saxon; galles, Dutch.]
1. The bile; an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.
Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murth'ring ministers! Shak.
A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.
It drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakespeare's King Lear.
This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb more peremptorily implies, 'tis as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gailable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet savour.
Harvey on Consumptions.
- Gall is the greatest solvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an el with succes. Arbuthnot on Diet.
2. The part which contains the bile.
The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown's Vul. Err.
 3. Any thing extremely bitter.
Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste! Shakep.
She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more. Dryd. Juv.
- Rancour; malignity.
They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser's State of Ireland.
5. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [From the verb.]
This is the fatallest wound of the tongue, carries least smart, but infinitely more of danger; and is as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch: this may be fore and vexing, but that stupifying and deadening.
Government of the Tongue, f. 8.
6. Anger; bitterness of mind.
Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and fluns the blow. Prior.

GAL

7. [From galla.]

Galls or gallnuts are a kind of preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on various trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have two kinds, the Oriental and the European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm and solid texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort, both in manufactures and medicine. The general history of galls is this: an insect of the fly kind, for the safety of her young, wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg of the fly, which, as soon as it is perfect, and in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen on its surface, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within, on breaking it. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescences which we find on this tree in our own woods, and call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true and genuine galls, though less firm in their texture. The true reason of the hard ones not being produced with us, seems to be that we want the peculiar species of insect to which they owe their origin, which is a fly of the ichneumon kind, only found in hot countries. The species of fly that occasions, by its punctures, the soft galls of France and Italy, is different both from the Syrian one and from ours, though still of the ichneumon kind; and we find the several kinds, which occasion the different galls in our own kingdom, produce different kinds, and those of different degrees of hardness, on the same tree. Galls are used in making ink, and in dying and dressing leather, and many other manufactures. In medicine they are very astringent, and good under proper management. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 635.
Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray on the Creation.
The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.
To GALL, v. a. [galer, French.]
1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast. Denham.
A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.
On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope's Iliad.
2. To impair; to wear away.
He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare.
If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray on the Creation.
3. To tease; to fret; to vex.
In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker, b. ii.
What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we spy that it galles them. Hooker, b. iv. f. 9.
When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall. Shakespeare.
Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,
That I extend my manners: 'tis my breeding,
That gives me this bold shew of courtesy. Shakespeare's Othello.
All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke, Shak. H. IV.
No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently gal'd with the remembrance of it. Tillotson's Sermons.
5. To harass; to mischief.
The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.
Light demilances from afar they throw,
Fatten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe. Dryd. Æn.

GAL

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows. Addison on the State of the War.
To GALL, v. n. To fret.

I have seen you ghecking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare's Henry V.
GALLANT, adj. [galant, French, from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.
A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gally with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. Jf. xxxiii. 21.
The gay, the wife, the gallant, and the grave,
Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Waller.
2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous.
Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney, b. ii.
But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth. Shakespeare.
A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight into them than to satisfy himself by what way they may be performed. Digby on the Soul, Dedicated.
3. Fine; noble; specious.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant shew and promise of their mettle. Shakespeare.
He discourd, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress. Clarendon.
4. Inclined to courtship.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin
In gallant thought to plume their painted wings. Thomson.
GALLANT, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.

The new proclamation.
—What is't for?
—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor. Shakespeare.
The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vassius. Kneller's History of the Turks.
The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly spirit. Dryden.
Gallants, look to't, you say there are no sprights;
But I'll come dance about your beds at nights. Dryden.
2. A whoremaster, who cares less women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
The next carried a handsome young fellow upon her back: she had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.
3. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

GALLANTLY, adv. [from gallant.]
1. Gayly; splendidly.
2. Bravely; nobly; generously.
You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman. Swift.
GALLANTRY, n. f. [galanterie, French.]

1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.
Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.
2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.
The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature. Glanv. Sceps. Preface.
3. A number of gallants.

Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
4. Courtship; refined address to women.
The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their chacters kind. Granville.
5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins. Swift.
GALLEASS, n. f. [galeas, French.] A large galley; a vessel of war driven with oars.

My father hath no less Than three great galleasses, besides two galleasses,
And twelve tight galleies. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, like whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers. Bacon's War with Spain.
GALLEON, n. f. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk or set on fire by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh's Apology.

GALLERY, n. f. [galerie, French, derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.
In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow. Sidney, b. i.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content. Shakespeare.
The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupola's. Bacon.
A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Denham.
Nor is the shape of our cathedral proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish-churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Cravint.
There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.

2. The feats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.
While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends. Pope's Ep. of Horace.
GALLETYLE, n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with galipot.
Make a compound body of glass and galley; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GALLEY, n. f. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived, as some think, from galea, a helmet pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλῆρα, the swordfish; as others from galleon, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galloes, galleon, galiant.]
1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.
Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, galley, barks and brigandines. Fairfax.
In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, and especially far voyages; the rather by the use of galley, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean.

Bacon's New Atlantis.
Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Lefs in an open boat, or kind of galley. Raleigh's History of the World.
On oozy ground his galley moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their stems to shore. Dryden.
2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the galley for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure. South's Sermons.
GALLEY-SLAVE, n. f. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the galley.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor man, but he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy. Bramb.
Hardened galley-slaves despite manumission. Deay of Piety.
The furies gently dash against the shore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar. Garth.
GALLIARD, n. f. [galliard, French; imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius, and gay.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.
Selden is a galliard by himself. Cleveland.
2. An active, nimble, sprightly dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.
I did think by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
There's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukesdoms there. Shakespeare's Henry V.
If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards. Bacon.
The tripl's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and measure time are in the melody of one dance. Bacon's Natural History.
GALLIARISE, n. f. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watry sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown's Rel. Med.

GALLICISM, n. f. [gallicisme, French, from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language; such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have Gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Felton on the Classics.
GALLIGASKINS, n. f. [Calice Gallo-Vasconum. Skinner.] Large open hose.
My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The Winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue,
An horrid chafin disclose. Phillips.

GALLIMATIA, n. f. [galimatias, French.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.
GALLIMAUFRY, n. f. [gallimaufre, French.]
1. A hoch-poch, or hals of several sorts of broken meat; a medley.
They have made of our English tongue a gallimaufry, or hodge-podge of all other speeches. Spenser.
2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley.

They have a dance, which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
The painter who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere gallimaufry of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. It is used by Shakespeare ludicrously of a woman.

Sir John affects thy wife.
—Why, sir, my wife is not young.
—He woos both high and low, both rich and poor;
He loves thy gallimaufry, friend. Shakespeare.
GALLIOT, n. f. [galliotte, French.] A small swift galley.
Barbarossa departing out of Hellepontus with eighty galley, and certain galley, shaped his course towards Italy. Kneller.
GALLIPOT, n. f. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner.] The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gallypot, is a fine painted pot. A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gal-lipot, that had on the outside apes, owls, and fays; but within, precious drugs. Bacon, Apophth. 227.
Here phials in nice discipline are set;
There gallopots are rang'd in alphabet. Garth's Dispensatory.
Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallopot to any man. Spectator, N^o. 426.
Thou that do'st Æsculapius deride,
And o'er his gallopots in triumph ride. Penton.

GALLON, n. f. [gale, low Latin.] A liquid measure of four quarts.
Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopp'd. Weseman's Surgery.
GALLOON, n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace, made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GALLUP, v. n. [galoper, French. Derived by all the etymologists, after Budaus, from καλῶς; but perhaps it comes from gaut, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]
1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who wast came by? Shak. Macb.
His steeds will be restrain'd,
But gallop lively down the western hill. Donne.
In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain
His heavy limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,
When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryden's Virgil.
2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.
Seeing such streams of blood as threaten'd a drowning life,
We galloped toward them to part them. Sidney, b. ii.

They 'gan espy
An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Queen, b. i.
He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.
The golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glitt'ring coach. Shak. Tit. Andr.
Whom doth time gallop withal?
—With a thief to the gallows. Shakespeare's As you like it.
He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.
GALLOR, n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

GAM

GALLOPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Martin. Husb.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

GALLOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway; a shire in Scotland.

To GALLOW. v. a. [agelpan, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies

Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,

And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GALLOWGLASSES. n. f.

It is worth then likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hammer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r

Of gallowglasse and stout kernes,

Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakef. Henry VI.

GALLOW. n. f. [It is used by some in the singular; but by Gallows.] more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowes. Ga'ga, Gothick; zealga, Saxon; galege, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus, furca, Latin; others from gall, high; others from gallus, Welsh, power; but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from agelpan, the gallowes being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged. This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney, b. ii.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gallowes. Shakef. Cymbel.

I prophesied, if a gallow were on land, This fellow could not drown. Shakespeare's Tempest.

A little before dinner he took the major aside, and whispered him in the ear, that execution must that day be done in the town, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Hayward.

A production that naturally groweth under gallowes, and places of execution. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of waips while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

2. A wretch that deserves the gallows.

Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy. —Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallow too. Shakespeare.

GALLOWFREE. adj. [gallow and free.] Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowfree by my consent, And nothing suffer, since he nothing meant. Dryden.

GALLOWTREE. n. f. [gallow and tree.] The tree of terror; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more defiance, On gallowtrees, in honour of his dearest dame. Fai. Queen.

A Scot, when from the gallowtree got loose, Drops into Styx, and turns a foland goose. Cleaveland.

GAMBADE. n. f. [gamba, Italian, a leg.] Spatterdash; GAMBA DO. n. f. boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambadoes once a week. Dennis's Letters.

GAMBLER. n. f. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamester.] A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game and cheat them.

GAMBOGE. n. f. Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature. It is heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America, and from many parts of the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia, whence it has its name. Gamboge was not known in Europe till 1603, and soon after got into use as a purgative medicine; but the roughness of its operation rendering it less esteemed as such, it got into use in painting, where it yet retains its credit. Hill.

To GAMBOL. v. n. [gamboller, French.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frolic; to jump for joy; to play merry frolics.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,

4. A single match at play. Advantage in play. Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand, And play the game into each other's hand. Dryden.

5. Scheme pursued; measures planned. This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they see an end of this. Temple.

6. Field sports: as, the chase, falconry. If about this hour he make his way, Under the colour of his usual game, He shall here find his friends with horse and men, To set him free from his captivity. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

7. What arms to use, or nets to frame. Wild beasts to combat, or to tame, With all the myst'ries of that game. Waller.

8. Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game, spied a company of bustards and cranes. L'Estrange.

9. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen. Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game, With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton's Parad. Lost.

There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I am distracted in my choice, and know not which to follow. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

A bloodhound will follow the track of the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chase. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer; I and my Chloe take a nobler aim, At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game. Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began, A mighty hunter, and his prey was man: Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name, And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Pope.

9. Solemn contests exhibited as spectacles to the people. The games are done, and Cæsar is returning. Shakespeare.

Milo, when entering the Olympick game, With a huge ox upon his shoulders came. Denham.

To GAME. v. n. [gaman, Saxon.]

1. To play at any sport.

2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money. Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind. Locke.

GAMCOCK. n. f. [game and cock.] Cocks bred to fight.

They managed the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit. Locke.

GAMFROG. n. f. [game and egg.] Eggs from which fighting cocks are bred.

Thus boys hatch game-eggs under birds of prey, To make the fowl more furious for the fray. Garth.

GAO

Your flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open. Arbutnot.

GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

Oh, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me. Shakef. Merry Wives of Windsor.

As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mastiff fell a barking. L'Estrange, Fable 21.

Admitted in among the gang, He acts and talks as they befriend him. Prior.

GANGHON. [French.] A kind of flower. Ainsworth.

GANGLION. n. f. [γᾱγγλίον.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts, proceeding from a fall or stroke. It relits, if stirred; if pressed upon the side, is not diverted, nor can be turned round. Harris.

Bonefsetters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint. Wisean.

GANGRENE. n. f. [gangrene, Fr. gangrena, Lat.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction. This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates. Bacon's Natural History.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay, By cutting hope, like a lost limb, away. Waller.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene. Wisean's Surgery.

If the substance of the soul is fettered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: the inflammation will rage to all eternity. Addison's Spectator.

To GANGRENE. v. a. [gangrene, French, from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently; for that the few spirits, that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete. Bacon's Natural History.

Gangren'd members must be lop'd away, Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay. Dryden.

To GANGRENE. v. n. To become mortified. My griefs not only pain me As a lingering disease;

But finding no redress, ferment and rage, Nor less than wounds immedicable Rankle and fester, and gangrene To black mortification. Milton's Agonist.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out. Wisean's Surgery.

GANGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hemorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous. Arbutnot on Aliments.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone, Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose, To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryden's Juv.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Locke.

GANZA. n. f. [gansa, Spanish, a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies, And favour strongly of the ganza's. Hudibras, p. ii.

GAOL. n. f. [gaol, Welsh; geol, French.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol. Sh. K. Lear.

Have I been ever free, and must my house Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakespeare's Timon.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

GAOLDELIVERY. n. f. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' aspiring soul the body leave, Which we call death; but were it known to all, What life our souls do by this death receive, Men would it birth or gaoldelivery call. Davies.

These make a general gaoldelivery of souls, not for punishment. South.

GAOLER. n. f. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steely gaoler is the friend of men. Sh. Meas. for Meas.
I know not how or why my furly gaoler,
Hard as his irons, and insolent as pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes, Put off the brute. Dryden's Cleomenes.
From the polite part of mankind she had been banished immured, till the death of her gaoler Tatler, N^o. 53.

GAP. n. f. [from gape.]
1. An opening in a broken fence.
Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tupper's Husbandry.
With terrors and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the waste deep. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
Bushes are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry.
I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it. Rogers, Sermon 18.
2. A breach.
The loss of that strong city concerned the Christian commonweal: manifold and lamentable miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap, not unto the kingdom of Hungary only, but to all that side of Christendom. Kneller.
3. Any passage.
He's made master
O' th' rolls and the king's secretary: further Stands in the gap, and trends for more preferment. Shakesp.
So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.
4. An avenue; an open way.
The former kings of England pass'd into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stop't. Spenser.
5. A hole; a deficiency.
If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shak. King Lear.
Nor is it any botch or gap at all in the works of nature.
More's Antidote against Atheism.
6. Any interstice; a vacuity.
Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were dissever'd. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.
One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift's Gentle Conversation.
7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.
The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.
8. To stop a GAP, is to escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, till the quickets will grow.
His policy consists in setting traps,
In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps. Swift.
GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth.
The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad-speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
To GAPE. v. n. [zeapan, Saxon.]
1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.
Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shakespeare.
Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbutnot.
She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.
2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.
As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;
And at each least that stirs, each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find.
As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.
3. To desire earnestly; to crave. With fer.
To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes. Denham.
To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?

GAR

And thou, who gap'st for my estate, draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryden's Pers.
4. With after.
What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments? L'Estrange.
5. With at.
Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopp'd in the church-yard. South's Sermons.
6. To open in fissures or holes.
If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape
And bid me hold my peace. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father. Sh. H. VI.
The great horse-muffel, with the fine shell, doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon's Natural History.
The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.
The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vessels. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
7. To open with a breach.
The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.
That all these actions can be performed by aliment; as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbutnot.
8. To open; to have an hiatus.
There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a cesura in this whole poem.
Dryden's An. Dedication.
9. To make a noise with open throat.
And, if my muse can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Refcommen.
10. To stare with hope or expectation.
Others will gape 't anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foresee
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras, p. ii.
11. To stare with wonder.
Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawner; and the end of all this to cause laughter: a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gaze at. Dryden's Duffresne.
Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd, Betimes retreat. Gay's Trivia.
12. To stare irreverently.
They have gaped upon me with their mouth. Jeb xvi. 10.
GAPER. n. f. [from gape.]
1. One who opens his mouth.
2. One who stares foolishly.
3. One who longs or craves.
The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.
GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.
To GAR. v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. It is still in use in Scotland.
Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lols forlorn. Spenser's Pastoral.
GARB. n. f. [garbe, French.]
1. Dress; cloaths; habit.
Thus Bellal, with words cloath'd in reason's garb, Counsell'd ignoble ease, and peaceful sloth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange, Fable 37.
2. Fashion of dress.
Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their cloaths, did wear. Denham.
3. Exterior appearance.
This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A faucy roughness, and confines the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakespeare's King Lear.
GARBAGE. n. f. [garbear, Spanish.] This etymology is very doubtful.
1. The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub

GAR

Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb,
Longs after for the garbage. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will fate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
A flam more feniceless than the rog'ry
Of old Anupicy and aug'ry,
That out of garbages of cattle
Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras, p. ii.
Who, without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd? Refcommen.
When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage. Lryd. Span. Fryar.

bise of fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To GARBLE. v. a. [garbellare, Italian.] To sift; to part;
to separate the good from the bad.
But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake. Dryden.
Had our author set down this command without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.
The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to
it. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
GARBLER. n. f. [from garble.] He who separates one part from another.
A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it. Swift's Examiner.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GARDEN-WARE. n. f. The produce of gardens.
A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To GARDEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden;
to lay out gardens.
At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
When ages grow to civility and elegance, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection. Bacon, Essay 47.
GARDENER. n. f. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.
Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will. Shakespeare's Othello.
Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips. Bacon's Natural History.
The gardener may lop religion as he please. Havel.
The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions. Evelyn's Calendar.
Then let the learned gard'ner mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear. Dryd.
GARDENING. n. f. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planting gardens.

On nonsense gargl'd in an eunuch's throat. Fenton.
GARGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.
His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure. Wijeman's Surgery.
GARGLION. n. f. An exudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immovable tumour. Quincy.
GARGOL. n. f. A distemper in hogs.
The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite. Mortimer.
GARLAND. n. f. [garlande, gairland, French.] A wreath of branches or flowers.
Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village-lord that Whitfuntide to bear. Sidney.
With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakespeare.
A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.
—How! wear the garland! do it thou mean the crown?
—Ay, my good lord. Shakespeare's Richard III.
Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryden's Fables.
Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.
Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.
GARLICK. n. f. [gar, Saxon, a lance, and leek, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner.]
It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk;
and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Milner.
Garlick is of an extremely strong, and to most people a disagreeable smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is an extremely active and penetrating medicine, as may be proved by applying plaisters of garlick to the soles of the feet, which will in a very little time give a strong smell to the breath.
Issues will smell strongly of garlick three or four hours after a person has eaten it; and given to fowls, it communicates its taste strongly to their flesh, and in some degree to their eggs.
Bruised, and laid on any tender part of the skin, it corrodes it, and raises blisters. Some are very fond of it in food; and a little of it is not only agreeable this way, but assists digestion, and strengthens the stomach. Bill.
Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.
'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r:
Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate's Juven.
GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.
It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of four petals or leaves, which stand erect, the lower part being occupied by a number of chives: the pointal, which is fixed on a long foot-stalk,

GAR

stalk, rises from the centre of the empalement, and afterward becomes a globular fleshy fruit; in the centre of which are included many seeds, which are shaped almost like kidneys. This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places in the warmer parts of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit about the size of a tennis ball, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, somewhat like some of the European pears; but has a strong scent of garlic.

GARLICK Wild. n. f.
The characters are: it agrees in every respect with the garlic; but hath, for the most part, a sweet scent; and the flowers are produced in an umbel.

GARLICKEATER n. f. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.
You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlick-aters. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

GARMENT n. f. [guariment, old French.] Any thing by which the body is covered; cloaths; drefs.
Hence, rotten things, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Hast any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?
Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the fun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers.
Raleigh's History of the World.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore. Waller.
The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is drest.

GARNER n. f. [grenier, French.] A place in which threshed grain is stored up.
Earth's increase, and soylon plenty,
Barns and garners never empty. Shakespeare's Tempest.
For sundry foci the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground;
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryd. Vir. Geo.

GARNER v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in garners.
There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shakespeare's Othello.

GARNET n. f. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin, from its resemblance in colour, to the grain of the pomegranate.]
The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill.
The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple.
Woodward's Met. Fossils.

TO GARNISH v. a. [garnir, French.]
1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.
There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees.
All within with flowers was garnished,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,
Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.

With taper light
To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakespeare's King John.
Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnished with fruits, delighting both the eye and taste.
Raleigh's History of the World.

All the streets between the Bridge-foot and palace of Paul's, where the king then lay, were garnished with the citizens, standing in their liveries. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.
With what expence and art, how richly drest!
Garnish'd with 'sparagus, himself a feast! Dryd. Juven. Sat.
No man lards salt pork with spitchook'd eel. King's Cookery.
Or garnish his lamb with spitchook'd eel.

3. To fit with fetters.
GARNISH n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.
So are you, sweet,
Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
Matter and figure they produce;
For garnish this, and that for use;
They seek to feed and please their guests. Prior.

2. Things strewed round a dish.
3. [In gaols.] Fetters.
4. Penitencia carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a gaol. Ainsworth.

GAR

GARNISHMENT n. f. [from garnish.] Ornament; embellishment.
The church of Sancta Guistiniana in Padoua is a found piece of good art, where the materials being but ordinary stones, without any garnishment of sculpture, do ravish the beholders.
Wotton's Architecture.

GARNITURE n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.
They conclude, if they fall short in the furniture of their knees, that they are inferior in the furniture of their heads.
Government of the Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fires an age ago,
Is lost, without the garniture of show. Granville.
As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very audacious in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. Addison's Spectator.

GARROUS adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.
In a civet-cat a different and offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garrous excretion, and odious separation.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 4.

GARRAN n. f. [Erfle. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby. A Highland horse which when brought into the North of England takes the name of galloway.
When he comes forth he will make their cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Speiser.
Every man would be forced to provide Winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrans shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease. Temple.

GARRET n. f. [garite, the tower of a citadel, French.]
1. A room on the highest floor of the house.
The mob, commissiō'd by the government,
Are seldom to an empty garret sent. Dryden's Juven. Sat.
John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbutnot. J. Bull.
On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;
Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there:
And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence. Swift.

2. Rotten wood.
The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret. Bacon.

GARRETER n. f. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

GARRISON n. f. [garnison, French.]
1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.
How oft he said to me,
Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison. Sidney, b. i.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.
Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind. Waller.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.
Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies.
Sponser on Ireland.

TO GARRISON v. a. [from the verb.] To secure by fortresses.
Others those forces join,
Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine. Dryd. Juven.

GARRULITY n. f. [garrulitas, Latin.]
1. Lequacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.
Let me here
Expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrulity. Milton's Agonist.

2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.
Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all, loquacity or garrulity.
Ray on the Creation.

GARRULOUS adj. [garrulus, Latin.] Prattling; talkative.
Old age looks out,
And garrulous recounts the feats of youth. Thomson.

GARTER n. f. [cardus, Welsh; jartier, French, from gare, Welsh, the binding of the knee.]
1. A string or ribbon by which the stocking is held upon the leg.
Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Sh. Tam. of the Shrew.
When we rest in our cloaths we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage.
Ray.
Handsome garters at your knees.
There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves. Pope.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.
Now by my george, my garter.
—The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;
The garter, blench'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue. Sh. R. III.

GAS

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race. Dryden.

3. The principal king at arms.
TO GARTER v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.
He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose. Shakespeare.
A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place. Wife's Surgery.

GARTH n. f. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.
GAS n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses, and very unintelligibly and inconsistently. Har.

GASCONADE n. f. [from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.
Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.

TO GASCONADE v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.
TO GASH v. a. [from bachet, to cut, French. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.
Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death. Hayward.
Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image requires great art. Johnson, Sermon 2.

See me gash'd with knives,
Or fear'd with burning steel. Rew's Royal Convert.
Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,
He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell. A. Phillips.

GASH n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A deep and wide wound.
He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his target,
That broke the violence of his intent.
The weary soul from thence it would discharge. Fai. Queen.
A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Hayward.
But th' ethereal substance clos'd,
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd. Milt. P. Lest.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.
I was fond of back-sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar. Arbutnot.

GASKINS n. f. [from Gaisigne. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.
If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fall. Shak. Twelfth Night.

TO GASP v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gisse, Danish, to sob, Junius.]
1. To open the mouth wide to catch breath.
The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryd. Virg. Ges.
They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their *gasp*ing throats. Dryden.
The *gasp*ing head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk. Dryden's Æn.
The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire. Dryden.
A scantling of wit lay *gasp*ing for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Pale and faint,
He *gasp*s for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends. Addison's Cato.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.
I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;
The wolves will get a breakfast by my death. Dryden.
He flutters round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he *gasp*s away his breath. Dryden's Æn.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by *gasp*ing.
The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and *gasp*ed after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom. Speiser, N. 198.

GASP n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.
2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.
His fortunes all lie speckled, and his name
Is at last gasp. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shak. H. VI.
If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison's Rosamond.
Life's business at one gasp he cr. Pope.

TO GAST v. a. [from gast, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

GAT

When he saw my best alarmed spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether gated by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GASTRICK adj. [from gastre.] Belonging to the belly.
GASTROGRAPHY n. f. [gastre and graphe.] In strictness of etymology, signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine. Sharp's Surgery.

GASTROTOMY n. f. [gastre and tomos.] The act of cutting open the belly.
GAT n. f. The preterite of get. Ex. xxiv. 18.
Moses gat him up into the mount.

GATE n. f. [geat, Saxon.]
1. The door of a city, a castle, palace, or large building.
Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee. Shakespeare.
Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into inclosed grounds.
Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shakespeare.

3. An avenue; an opening.
Auria had done nothing but wisely and politickly, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war. Knolles's History of the Turks.

GATEVEIN n. f. The vena portæ.
Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood. Bacon's Henry VII.

GATEWAY n. f. [gate and way.] A way through gates of inclosed grounds.
Gateways between inclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another. Mortimer's Husbandry.

1. To collect; to bring into one place; to get in harvest.
I gathered me silver and gold. Ecclesi. ii. 8.
Gather stones—and they took stones and made an heap. Gen.
The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Lev. xxv. 20.

2. To pick up; to glean; to pluck.
His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges. Shak. Henry VIII.
Cast up the highway, gather out the stones. If. lxii. 10.
I will spend this preface upon those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer. Wotton.
To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees, as the sale of his commodities shall bring it in. Locke.

3. To crop.
What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

4. To assemble.
They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.
Come ye heathen, and gather yourselves together. Joel iii.
He led us through three fair streets; and all the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon's New Atlantis.

5. To heap up; to accumulate.
He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Prov. xxviii. 8.

6. To select and take.
Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. Psf. cvi. 47.

8. To collect charitable contributions.
9. To bring into one body or interest.
I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. If. lvi. 8.

10. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.
Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne;
Gathering his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand. Pope.

11. To gain.
He gathers ground upon her in the chace;
Now breathes upon her hair with nearer pace. Dryden.

12. To pucker needlwork.

GAU

13. To collect logically; to know by inference.
That which, out of the law either of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law.

Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakep.
After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us.
Asi. xvi. 10.

Return'd

By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibil, is at this time translating Chaucer into modern French: from which I gather, that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal.
Dryden's Fables, Preface.

We may easily gather from this passage what notion the ancients had concerning a future state. Notes on the Odyssey.
14. To GATHER breath. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky maid

A long time with that savage people staid,
To, a her bre th, in many miseries. Spenser.

To GATHER, v. n.

1. To be condensed; to thicken.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear. Dryden's Pasts.
When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries. Dry.
When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East and West, on airy couriers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.
Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison's Cato.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.
Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came in to them. Bacon's Henry VIII.

3. To assemble.

There be three things that mine heart feareth; the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Ecclus. xxvi. 5.

4. To generate pus or matter.

Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.
GATHER, n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers,
Part cannons, periwigs and feathers. Hudibras, p. i.

GATHERER, n. f. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.
I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other mens stuff. Wotton's Preface to Elem. of Architecture.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.
I was a herdman and a gatherer of fycamore-fruit. Amos vii.

Nor in that land

Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand. May's Virg.
GATHERING, n. f. [from gather.] Collection of charitable contributions.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gathering when I come. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

GATTEN-TREE. See CORNELIAN-CHERRY, of which it is a species.

GAUDE, n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain:
Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of gaude; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gaudis, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a thowly bawble, and the person fooled. It is also retained in Scotland to denote a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudes, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shakepeare.
The fun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,
To give me audience. Shakepeare's King Lear.

My love to Hermia

Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaudes,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shakepeare.

GAU

Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gaudes the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans finest holland bear. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
To GAUDE, v. a. [from gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaudie with me, Shakepeare.
After too long grief such nativity.
GAUDERY, n. f. [from gaude.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of drefs.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noolest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.
Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South's Sermons.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be tamish'd gaudy known. Dryden.

GAUDILY, adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.
GAUDINESS, n. f. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.
GAUDY, adj. [from gaude.] Showy; splendid; pompous;
ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakep. Hamlet.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless

As the gay motes that people the sun-beams. Milton.
A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hop'd to ride to side. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Phillips.

GAUDY, n. f. [from gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Chrys.

GAVE, The prerogative of give.

Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;
If thou canst give it, then thou never gav'st it:
Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it. Donne.

GA'VEL, n. f. A provincial word for ground.
Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mort.

GA'VELKIND, n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Cowd.

Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavellind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavellind. Davies on Ireland.

To GAUGE, v. a. [gauge, jauger, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced gag.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.
2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vases nicely gau'd on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham's Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer's battles of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope's Essay on Homer's Epics.

GAUGE, n. f. [from the verb.] A measure; a standard.

This plate must be a gauge to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Mason's Mech. Exerc.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth. Lee.

Timothy proposed to his mistresses, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

GAUCER, n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those cards and dukes have, from the beginning, been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and, to this end, appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, ganger, and echeator.

GAUNT, adj. [As if gaunt, from gepanian, to lessen, Saxon.]
Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old;
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who ab stains from meat that is not gaunt? For

GAZ

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leannels, leannels is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:
Canst am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whole hollow womb inherits nought but bones. Sh. R. II.

Two mastiffs, gaunt and grim, her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fallen'd fangs in blood embur'd. Dryd. Fables.

GAUNTLY, adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly; slenderly; meagerly.

GAUNTLET, n. f. [gantlet, French.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cistus, or boxing glove.

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakep. Henry IV. p. i.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This a gauntlet, that a muff. Cleaveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;
The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

Who naked wrestled betwixt, belmeard with oil;
Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil. Dryd. Fables.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light:
View his two gauntlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;
He throws the gauntlet Otway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field. Southern.

GA'VOT, n. f. [gavotte, French.] A kind of dance.

The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in preludes, fara-bances, jigs and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument.

Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

GAUZE, n. f. A kind of thin transparent silk.

Silken cloaths were used by the ladies; and it seems they were thin, like gauze. Arbutnot on Coins.

Brocades and damasks, and tabbies and gauzes,
Are lately brought over. Swift.

GAWK, n. f. [gawc, Saxon.]

1. A cuckoo.
2. A foolish fellow. In both senses it is retained in Scotland.

beer-casks are set when tunned.

GAY, adj. [gay, French.]

1. Airy; cheerful; merry; frolick.
Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently play;
Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay. Pope.

Ev'n rival wits did Voiture's fate deplore,
And the gay mourn'd, who never mourn'd before. Pope.

2. Fine; showy.
A virgin that loves to go gay. Bar. vi. 9.

GAY, n. f. [from the adjective.] An ornament; an embellishment.

Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem, as they do upon gays and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives tales. L'Estrange.

GA'YETY, n. f. [gayety, French, from gay.]

1. Cheerfulness; airiness; merriment.
2. Acts of juvenile pleasure.

And from those gayeties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

Our gayety and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakep. H. V.

GA'YLY, adv. Merrily; cheerfully; showily.

GA'YNESS, n. f. [from gay.] Gayety; finery. Not much in use.

To GAZE, v. n. [gázē, or rather gezean, to see, Sax.]

To look intently and earnestly; to look with eagerness.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world;
If so, gaze on. Shakepeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

From some she cast her modest eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving flew. Fairfax, b. iv.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Ecclus. ix. 5.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shakepeare.
Strait toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd a while the ample sky. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GAZE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.
Being light'ned with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of mulick touch their ears,

GEA

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Shakep. Merch. of Venice.

Not a month
Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now. Shakepeare's Winter's Tale.

With secret gaze,
Or open admiration, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd Worlds. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connexion as to our understanding, soars out of sight, and leaves his readers at a gaze. Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 27.

2. The object gazed on. I must die

Betrav'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;
To grind in brazen fetters, under talk,
With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton's Agonistes.

GAZE, n. f. [from gaze.] He that gazes; one that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermilion red did shew,
Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;
The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers sense with double pleasure fed. Fairy Queen.

I'll flay more gazers than the basilisk. Shakep. Hen. VI.

Come, basilisk,
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight. Shak. Hen. VI.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.

His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed. Watts's Logick.

GAZEFUL, adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,
The ravish'd hearts of gaze'ful men might rear,
To admiration of that heavenly light. Spenser on Beauty.

GAZEHOUND, n. f. [gaze and hound; canis gazeus, Skinner.]

A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.
See'st thou the gazehound! how with glance severe
From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer! Tickell.

GAZETTE, n. f. [gazet, a Venetian halpenny, the price of a news paper, of which the first was published at Venice.]

A paper of news; a paper of publick intelligence. It is accused indifferently on the first or last syllable.

And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger great, they challenge all;
Print new additions to their feats,
And emendations in gazettes. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

An English gentleman, without geography, cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.

One cannot hear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of a gazette. Addison's Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the press;
Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

GAZETTEER, n. f. [from gazette.]

1. A writer of news.

2. It was lately a term of the utmost infamy, being usually applied to wretches who were hired to vindicate the court.

Satire is no more: I feel it die:
No gazetteer more innocent than I. Pope.

GAZINGSTOCK, n. f. [gaze and stock.] A person gazed at with scorn or abhorrence.

These things are offences to us, by making us gazingstocks to others, and objects of their scorn and derision. Ray.

GAZON, n. f. [French.] In fortification, pieces of fresh earth covered with grass, cut in form of a wedge, about a foot long and half a foot thick, to line parapets and the traverses of galleries. Harris.

GEAR, n. f. [gýuan, to cloath; geapne, furniture, Saxon.]

1. Furniture; accoutrements; drefs; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous gear. Fairy Queen.
When he found her bound, stript from her gear,
And vile tormenters ready saw in place,
He broke through. Fairfax, b. ii. Stan. 27.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton.

I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again. Addison's Guardian.

To see some radiant nymph appear
In all her glitt'ring birthday gear,
You think some goddess from the sky
Descended, ready cut and dry. Swift.

2. The traces by which horses or oxen draw.

Apollo's spite Pallas discern'd, and flew to Tydeus' son;
His scourge reach'd, and his horse made fresh; then took her angry run

At king Eumelus, brake his gears. Chapman's Iliads.

10 D

The

GEL

The frauds he learn'd in his fanatick years
Made him uneasy in his lawful gears. Dryden.

1. To castrate; to deprive of the power of generation.
Geld bull-calf and ram-lamb as soon as they fall. Tusser.
Lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an enunch. Shakefp. Henry VI.

2. To deprive of any essential part.
He bears his course, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side,
Gelding th' oppos'd continent as much
As on the other side it takes from you. Shakefp. Henry IV.

3. To deprive of any thing immodest, or liable to objection.
They were diligent enough to make sure work, and to geld it so clearly in some places that they took away the very manhood of it. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.

GE'LDER. n. f. [from geld.] One that performs the act of castration.

Geld later with gelders, as many one do,
And look of a dozen to geld away two. Tass. Husbandry.

No fow gelder did blow his horn
To geld a cat, but cry'd reform. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

GE'LDER-ROSE. n. f. [I suppose brought from Gelderland.]
The leaves are like those of the maple-tree: the flowers consist of one leaf, which expands in a circular rose form, and is divided at the top into five parts: these are collected in form of an umbel, the largest of which grow on the outside, and are barren; but those in the middle are fruitful, producing red berries, in each of which is contained one flat heart-shaped seed.

The species are three. If the soil be moist, this plant affords a very agreeable prospect, both in the season when it is in flower, and also in the Autumn, when the fruit is ripe, which generally grows in large clusters, and is of a beautiful colour. Miller.

The gelder-rose is increased by suckers and cuttings. Mort.

GE'LDING. n. f. [from geld.] Any animal castrated, particularly an horse.

Though naturally there be more males of horses, bulls or rams than females; yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and weathers, there are fewer. Graunt.

The lord lieutenant may chuse out one of the best horses, and two of the best geldings; for which shall be paid one hundred pounds for the horse, and fifty pounds a-piece for the geldings. Temple.

GE'LDID. adj. [gelidus, Latin.] Extremely cold.

From the deep ooze and gelid cavern rous'd,
They flourish. Thomson's Spring.

Let the others be gelt for oxen. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GEM. n. f. [gemma, Latin.]

1. A jewel; a precious stone of whatever kind.
Love his fancy drew;
And so to take the gem Urania fought. Sidney.

I saw his bleeding rings,
Their precious gems new lost, became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, fav'd him from despair. Shakefp.
It will seem a hard matter to shadow a gem, or well pointed diamond, that hath many fides, and to give the lustre where it ought. Peacbam on Drawing.

Spices of small worth may lie unseen by day;
But night itself does the rich gem betray. Cowley.

The basis of all gems is, when pure, wholly diaphanous, and either crystal or an adamantine matter; but we find the diaphaneity of this matter changed, by means of a fine metallic matter. Woodward.

2. The first bud.

From the joints of thy prolific stem
A swelling knot is raised, call'd a gem;
Whence, in short space, itself the cluster shows. Denham.
Embolden'd out they come,
And swell the gems, and burst the narrow room. Dryden.

The orchard loves no wave
With Winter winds, before the gem exert Their feeble heads. Philips.

To GEM. v. a. [gemma, Latin.] To adorn, as with jewels or buds.

To GEM. v. n. [gemmo, Latin.] To put forth the first buds.

Last rose, in dance, the stately trees, and spread
Their branches; hung with copious fruit; or gemm'd
Their blossoms. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

GE'NERAL. n. f.

1. The whole; the totality; the main, without insisting on particulars.

That which makes an action fit to be commanded or forbidden, can be nothing else, in general, but its tendency to promote or hinder the attainment of some end. Norris.

In particulars our knowledge begins, and so spreads itself by degrees to generals. Locke.

I have considered gen'ral's Paradise Lost in the fable, the characters, the sentiments, and the language; and have shewn that he excels, in general, under each of these heads. Addison.

2. The publick; the interest of the whole. Not in use.

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the gen'ral
Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Ingulds and swallows other sorrows. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. The vulgar. Not in use.

The play, I remember, pleas'd not the million; 'twas cavariere to the gen'ral: but it was, as I received it, and others, whose judgment in such matters cried in the top of mine, an excellent play. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

4. [General, Fr.] One that has the command over an army.

A gen'ral is one that hath power to command an army. Loc.

The generals on the enemy's side are inferior to several that once commanded the French armies. Addison on the War.

The war's whole art each private soldier knows,
And with a gen'ral's love of conquest glows. Addison.

GE'NERALISSIMO. n. f. [generalissimo, French, from general.] The supreme commander. It is often rather a title of honour than office.

Commision of generalissimo was likewise given to the prince. Clarendon, b. viii.

GEOMETRY. n. ſ. [from γεωμετρία, Greek.] Originally ſignifies the art of meaſuring the earth, or any diſtances or dimenſions on or within it: but it is now uſed for the ſcience of quantity, extension, or magnitude abſtractedly conſidered, without any regard to matter.
Geometry very probably had its firſt riſe in Egypt, where the Nile annually overflowing the country, and covering it with mud, oblig'd men to diſtinguiſh their lands one from another, by the conſideration of their figure; and after which, 'tis probable, to be able alſo to meaſure the quantity of it, and to know how to plot it, and lay it out again in its juſt dimenſions, figure and proportion: after which, it is likely, a farther contemplation of thoſe draughts and figures helped them to diſcover many excellent and wonderful properties belonging to them; which ſpeculations were continually improving, and are fill to this day. Geometry is uſually divided into ſpeculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abſtractedly; and the latter applies theſe ſpeculations and theorems to uſe and practice, and to the benefit and advantage of mankind. Harris.
In the muſcles alone there ſeems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world. Ray on the Creation.
Him alſo for my cenſor I diſdain,
Who thinks all ſcience, as all virtue, vain;

GHA'STLY. adj. [gare, and pulle, Saxon.] Dreary; dismal; melancholy; fit for walking spirits.

Here would I dwell apart,
In ghastful grave, 'till my last sleep
Do close mine eyes:
Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound
Is sign of dreary death. Spenser's Pastorals.

GHA'STLINESS. n. f. [from ghastly.]
1. Horror of countenance; resemblance of a ghost; paleness.

GHA'STLY. adj. [gare, or ghost, and like.]
1. Like a ghost; having horror in the countenance; pale; dreadful; dismal.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
—O, I have past a miserable night;
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams,
So full of dismal terror was the time. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Envy quickly discovered in court Solymán's changed countenance upon the great basia, and began now to shew her ghastly face. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Grinn'd horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
His famine should be fill'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Those departed friends, whom at our last separation we saw disfigured by all the ghastly horrors of death, we shall then see assisting about the majestic throne of Christ, with their once vile bodies transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body, mingling their glad acclamations with the halldujahs of thrones, principalities and powers. Boyle.

This poor man's desolate wife,
Expects some happy day;
This ghastly thing, the comfort of her life. Flatman.

He came, but with such alter'd looks,
So wild, so ghastly, as if some ghost had met him,
All pale and speechless. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

I did not for these ghastly visions send;
Their sudden coming does some ill portend. Dryden, Ind. Em.

I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier! Prior.

2. Horrible; shocking; dreadful.
To be less than gods
Disdain'd; but meaner thoughts learn'd in their flight, Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail. Milt.

vailed.] To conjecture.

GHOST. n. f. [gare, Saxon.]
1. The soul of man.
Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! He hates him,
That would upon the rack of this rough world Stretch him out longer. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood Kept in my soul. Shak. R. III.

Man, when once cut down, when his pale ghost
Fleets into air, is for ever lost. Sandys's Paraphrase.

2. A spirit appearing after death.
The mighty ghosts of our great Harrys rose,
And armed Edwards look'd with anxious eyes,
To see this fleet among unequal foes,
By which fate promis'd them their Charles should rise. Dryden.

3. To give up the GHOST. To die; to yield up the spirit into the hands of God.
Their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies ready to give up the ghost. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

1. Spiritual; relating to the soul; not carnal; not secular.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have,

GIB

as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind so easily known, but the gifts of God, according to these degrees and times, which he in his secret wisdom seeth meet, are so diversly bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive, what all stand in need of, it seldom lieth hid. Hooker, b. v. f. 35.

The graces of the spirit are much more precious than worldly benefits, and our ghostly evils of greater importance than any harm which the body feeleth. Hooker, b. v. f. 35.

To deny me the ghostly comfort of my chaplains, seems a greater barbarity than is ever used by Christians. King Charles.

2. Having a character from religion; spiritual.

GIA'MBEUX. n. f. [jambes, French.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.

The mortal steel dispiteously entail'd,
Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream down their gamboux falls. F. 2.

GIA'NT. n. f. [geant, French; gigas, Latin.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness.

Now does he feel his axle
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Woman's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant rude invention;
Such Ethiop words. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Fierce faces threat'ning wars,
Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise! Milt. P. L.

Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time. Raleigh's History.

The giant brothers, in their camp, have found
I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground. Dryden's En.

By weary steps and flow
The groping giant with a trunk of pine Explor'd his way. Addison.

Neptune, by pray'r repentant, rarely won,
Afflicts the chief to avenge his giant son,
Great Polyphemus, of more than mortal might. Pope.

GIA'NTRESS. n. f. [from giant.] A she-giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

giantly difficulties. Deay of Pity.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to, and those unwar-table doubts and difficulties, which over their cups, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to delfy his money, the proud man not to adore himself, and I dare undertake that all their giantlike objections against the Christian religion shall presently vanish and quit the field. South's Sermons.

GIA'NTSHIP. n. f. [from giant.] Quality or character of a giant.

His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n,
Stalking with less unconscionable strides,
And lower looks. Milton's Arcades.

GIBBE. n. f. Any old worn-out animal.
For who that's but a queen, fair, sober, wife,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gibbe,
Such dear concerns hide? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

To GIBBER. v. n. [from jabber.] To speak inarticulately.
The sheeted dead

Did squeak and giber in the Roman streets. Shakespeare, Haml.

GIBBERISH. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from gaber, French, to cheat; by others conjectured to be formed by corruption from jabber. But as it was anciently written gebrish, it is probably derived from the chymical cant, and originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe.] Cant; the private language of rogues and gibbles; words without meaning.

Some, if they happen to hear an old word, albeit very natural and significant, cry out straitway, that we speak no English, but gibberish. Spenser.

Some of both sexes writing down a number of letters, just as it came into their heads; upon reading this gibberish, that which the men had wrote sounded like High Dutch, and the other by the women like Italian. Swift.

But the dean, if this secret shou'd come to his ears,
Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers. Swift.

GIBBER. n. f. [from gibe.] A sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.

You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the table, than a necessary bencher of the capitol. Shakespeare, Cor.

Mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorn
That dwell in ev'ry region of his face. Shakespeare, Othello.

The rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden's Juven.

If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment.

Spektator, N^o. 300.
But the dean, if this secret shou'd come to his ears,
Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers. Swift.

GIBBO'SITY. n. f. [gibbosity, Fr. from gibbus.] Convexity; prominence; protuberance.

When two ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the interjacent water? Ray.

GIBBOUS. adj. [gibbus, Latin; gibbeux, Fr.]
1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.

The bones will rise, and make a gibbous member. Wifeman.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.

The sea, by this access and recess, shuffling the empty shells, wears them away, reducing those that are concave and gibbous to a flat. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Crookbacked.
I shall demand how the camels of Baëria came to have two bunches in their back, whereas the camels of Arabia, in all relations, have but one? How oxen, in some countries, began and continue gibbous, or hunch-backed? Brown.

GIBBOUSNESS. n. f. [from gibbus.] Convexity; prominence.

To make the convexity of the earth discernible, suppose a man lifted in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon;
but then, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbous-ness would vanish away, and he would only see a great circular flat. Bentley's Sermons.

GIBCAT. n. f. [gib and cat.] An old worn-out cat.
I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a lugg'd bear. Shakespeare.

To GIBE. v. n. [gaber, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.]
To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, left they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party. Hooker, b. iv. f. 9.

When he saw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
And pass the bounds of modest merry-make,
Her dalliance he despis'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 6.

Why that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whole influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools. Shakespeare.

Thus with talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude,
When you partly raise your frown,
Fleer and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

To GIBE. v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to sneer; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer; to taunt.

When rioting in Alexandria: you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my miffive out of audience. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Draw the beasts as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them. Swift.

GIBE. n. f. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word

He is a gibber, and our present business
Is of more serious consequence. Ben. Johnson's Cautious.

GIBBINGLY. adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully; contemptuously.
His present portance,

Gibbingly and ungravelly he did fashion
After th' inveterate hate he bears to you. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

GIBBETS. n. f. [According to Minshew from gibbet, gibbet:
according to Junius more probably from gibbet, game, Fr.]
The parts of a goose which are cut off before it is roasted.

'Tis holiday; provide me better cheer:
'Tis holiday; and shall be round the year:
Shall I my household gods and genius cheat,
To make him rich who grudges me my meat?
That he may loll at ease; and pamper'd high,
When I am laid, may feed on gibbet pie. Dryden's Pers.

GIDDILY. adv. [from giddy.]
1. With the head seeming to turn round.
2. Inconstantly; unsteadily.

3. To adorn with lustre.
No more the rising sun shall gild the morn,
Nor evening Cynthia fill her silver horn. Pope's Messiah.
4. To brighten; to illuminate.
The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.
5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. Shaksp. Hen. IV.
Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more delight;
'Tis gild'd o'er with youth, to catch the sight. Dryd. Aureng.
GILDER, n. f. [from gild.]
1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.
Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth, to draw the spirits of the quicksilver. Bacon's Natural History.
We have here a gilder, with his anvil and hammer.
2. A coin, from one shilling and sixpence, to two shillings. Phil.
I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shakespeare.
GILDING, n. f. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.
Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit. Bacon's Physic Rem.
The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.
Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage,
And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope's Hor.
GILL, n. f. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Latin.]
1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.
The leviathan,
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land; and at his gills Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milt. P. Lost.
Fishes perform their respiration under water by the gills.
Ray on the Creation.
He hath, on the bottom of his sides, two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but for a good part before them. Walton.
'Till they, of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the maw with gills entangl'd left. King's Fisherman.
2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.
The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon's Natural History.
3. The flesh under the chin.
In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the fending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon's Natural History.
Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.
4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint.
Every bottle must be rinsed with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rinse a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.
5. [From gillian, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language.
I can, for I will,
Here at Burley o' th' Hill,
Give you all your fill,
Each Jack with his Gill. Ben. Johnson's Gypsy.

6. The

GIN

6. The name of a plant; ground-ivy.
7. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.
GILLHOUSE, n. f. [gill and house.] A house where gill is fold.
These shall each alehouse, these each gillhouse mourn,
And answ'ring ginshops fourer sighs return. Pope.
GILLYFLOWER, n. f. [Either corrupted from July flower, or from ginsflower, French.]
Gillyflowers, or rather Julyflowers, so called from the month they blow in, are of a very great variety; but they may be reduced to these sorts: red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white, the various kinds of which are too many to enumerate. Mortimer's Herbariary.
In July come gillyflowers of all varieties. Bacon's Essay 47.
Fair is the gillyflower of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet. Gay's Pastorals.
GILT, n. f. [from gild.] Golden shew; gold laid on the surface of any matter. Now obsolete.
Our gaynels and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shaksp. Hen. V.
When thou wast in thy gill, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
The double gilt of this opportunity you let time wash off.
Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
GILT, The participle of GILD, which see.
Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way. Pope.
GILTHEAD, n. f. [gilt and head.] A fish.
GILT-TAIL, n. f. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.
GIM, adj. [An old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.
GIMCRACK, n. f. [Suggested by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.
For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbic ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
What's the meaning of all these trappings and gim-cracks? What, in the name of wonder, are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
GIMLET, n. f. [giblet, gimblet, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.
The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Moxon.
GIMMAL, n. f. [Suggested by Skinner and Ansforth to be derived from gimulus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hammer.
I think by some odd giminals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
GIMMER, n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.
The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magick. Mare's Divine Dialogues.
GIMP, n. f. [See GIM.] Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce;
A kind of silk twist or lace.
GIN, n. f. [from engine.]
1. A trap; a snare.
As the day begins,
With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pasture make. Sidney, b. i.
Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
Hath slain Sir Mordant. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
So flutes the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the cony struggle in the net. Shaksp. Henry VI.
Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
If those, who have but sense, can stum
The engines that have them annoy'd;
Little for me had reason done. Ben. Johnson's Forest.
I know thy trains,
Though dearly to my cost, thy gins and toils;
No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.
He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run their own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,
Without th' expense of cheese and bacon. Hudibras, p. ii.
Keep from flaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.
2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture.
Typhæus joints were stretched on a gin. Fairy Queen.
3. A pump worked by rotatory falls.
A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water drizzling on the outside of the gin pump of Mostyn coalpits. Wardour on Puffins.
4. [Contracted from GENEVA, which see.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.

GIP

- This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope, Dial. 1.
Thee shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,
And answ'ring ginshops fourer sighs return. Pope's Dunciad.
GINGER, n. f. [zingiber, Latin; gingero, Italian.]
The flower consists of five leaves, which are shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in an head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary afterwards becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain their seeds. Miller.
The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves, cut small in their salads, and make an excellent sweetmeat of them. Ginger is an excellent carminative and stomachick. Hill's Mat. Medica.
Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope's Dunciad.
GINGERBREAD, n. f. [ginger and bread.] A kind of fari-nacous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.
An' I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread. Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost.
Her currans there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cookery.
'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks froth, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.
GINGERLY, adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously, nicely.
What is't that you
Took up so gingerly? Shakespeare's Two Gent. of Verona.
GINGERNESS, n. f. Niceness; tenderness. Diët.
GINGIVAL, adj. [gingiva, Latin.] Belonging to the gums.
Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlude appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perverseness. Holder's Elements of Speech.
TO GINGLE, v. n.
1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.
The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket ginging halfpence found. Gay's Trivia.
Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And ginging down the backstairs, told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope's Epistles.
2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.
TO GINGLE, v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.
Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells the gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.
GINGLE, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A shrill resounding noise.
2. Affectation in the sound of periods.
GINGLYMOID, adj. [ginglymus, and oid.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.
The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymid joint. Holder's Elements of Speech.
GINGLYMUS, n. f. [ginglime, French.] A mutual indowing of two bones into each other's cavity, of which the elbow is an instance. Wjeman.
GINNET, n. f. [ginnet.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.
GINSENG, n. f. [I suppose Chinense.] A root brought lately into Europe. It never grows to any great size, and is of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent.
It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China; and there is of it in the same latitudes in America. The Chinese value this root so highly, that it sells with them for three times its weight in silver. The Asiatics in general think the ginseng almost an universal medicine. The virtues most generally believed to be in it are those of a restorative, and a cordial.
The European physicians esteem it a good medicine in convulsions, vertiges, and all nervous complaints; and recommend it as one of the best restoratives known. Hill.
TO GIP, v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.
GIPSY, n. f. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe they declared, and perhaps truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]
1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.
The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in

- the pantry with an old gippy for above half an hour. Addison.
A frantick gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants. Prior.
I, near yon stile, three fallow gyffes met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.
In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;
A figil in this hand the gippy bears,
In th' other a prophetick sieve and sheers. Garth's Dispensat.
2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.
Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench; Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gippy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.
The widow play'd the gippy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.
A slave I am to Clara's eyes:
The gippy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.
GIRASOLE. n. f. [girafol, French.]
1. The herb turnsole.
2. The opal stone.
To GIRD. v. a. pret. girded, or girt. [gyrdan, Saxon.]

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Mac. x. 25.
2. To put on so as to surround or bind.
Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to banddages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Gulliver.
3. To fasten by binding.
He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac. iii. 3.
My bow and thunder, my almighty arms
Gird on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milt. P. L.
No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe: Addison's Cato.
The combatant too late the field declines,
When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.
4. To invest.
Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;
And in requerdon of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakespeare. H. VI.
The son appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.
I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with filk. Ezek. xvi. 10.
Typhon here keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the fowls that pass the downward way. Dryd.
6. To cover round as a garment.
These, with what skill they had, together fow'd,
To gird their waist: vain covering, if to hide
Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton's Paradise Lost.
7. To reproach; to gibe.
Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods. Shakef.
8. To furnish; to equip.
So to the coast of Jordan he direct's
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Paradise Regain'd.
9. To inclose; to incircle.
That Nyctean isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham
Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milt. P. L.
To GIRD. v. n. To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.
Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang: from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly.
This word is now seldom used.
Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:
For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent. Shakef. H. VI.
They give satisfaction to his mind, and his conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheist feels. Tillotson, Sermon 2.
He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss. Goodman's Winter Evening Con.
GIRDER. n. f. [from gird.] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders. Horris.
The girders are also to be of the same cantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girders need not be so strong as the front girders. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd. Blackm. Creation.
GIRDLE. n. f. [gyrdel, Saxon.]
1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

GIS

- There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle,
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakespeare.
Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 21.
On him his mantle, girdle, sword and bow,
On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cowley.
2. Enclosure; circumference.
Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies. Shakef. Hen. V.
3. The equator; the torrid zone.
Great breezes in great circles, such as are under the girdle
of the world, do refrigerate. Bacon.
To GIRDLE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To gird; to bind as with a girdle.
Lay the gentle babes, girdling one another Within their innocent alabaster arms. Shakef. Rich. III.
2. To inclose; to shut in; to environ.
Those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited. Shakespeare's King John.
Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves! Shakespeare's Timon.
GIRDLEBELT. n. f. [girdle and belt.] The belt that incircles the waist.
Nor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girdlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold. Dryden's Æn.
GIRDLER. n. f. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles.
GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.
GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Merrius Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from gyros, of the same signification; Minsheu from garula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from herules, Welsh, from which, says he, harlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceofol for a man, might likewise have ceofla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Eichs derives it most probably from the Islandick karlinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.
In those unfeign'd days was my wife a girl. Shakespeare.
And let it not displease thee, good Bianca;
For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shakespeare.
A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on. Dome.
Tragedy should blush as much to loope
To the low mimic follies of a farce,
As a grave matron would to dance with girls. Roscommon.
A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh, a girl, like her, must be divine! Dryden.
GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suited a girl; youthful.
In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor. Carew.
GIRLISHLY. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.
To GIRN. v. n. Seems to be a corruption of grim. It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, captious, or peevish person.
GIRROCK. n. f. A kind of fish. Diss.
GIRT. part. pass. [from To gird.]
To GIRT. v. a. [from gird.] To gird; to encompass; to encircle. Not proper.
In the dread ocean, undulating wide
Beneath the radiant line, that girts the globe,
The circling Typhon whirl'd from point to point. Thomson.
GIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A band by which the saddle or burthen is fixed upon the horse.
Here lies old Hobson, death hath broke his girt; Milton.
And here, alas! hath laid him in the dirt.
2. A circular bandage.
The most common way of bandage is by that of the girt, which girt hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends are tacked firmly together. Wiseeman's Surgeon.
GIRTH. n. f. [from gird.]
1. The band by which the saddle is fixed upon the horse.
Or the saddle turn'd round, or the girths brake;
For low on the ground, woe for his sake,
The law is found. Ben. Johnson's Underwood.
Nor Pegasus could bear the load,
Along the high celestial road;
The steed oppress'd, would break his girths,
To raise the lumber from the earth. Swift.
Mordanto gallops on alone;
The roads are with his foll'w'ers strown;
This breaks a girth, and that a bone. Swift.
2. The compass measured by the girdle, or enclosing bandage.
He's a luffy jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the girth. Addison's Freeholder.
To GIRTH. v. a. To bind with a girth.
To GISE Ground. v. a. Is when the owner of it does not feed it with his own stock, but takes in other cattle to graze. Barley.
GISTLE.

GIV

- GISTLE. Among the English Saxons, signifies a pledge; thus, Fredgile is a pledge of peace; Gisbert an illustrious pledge, like the Greek Homerus. Gibson's Camden.
GITH. n. f. An herb called Guiney pepper.
To GIVE. v. a. pret. gave; part. given. [gyfan, Saxon.]
1. To bestow; to confer without any price or reward.
This opinion abated the fear of death in them which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures. Hooker.
Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out. Mat. xxv.
Give us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord. Ex. x. 25.
I had a matter that gave me all I could ask, but thought fit to take one thing from me again. Temple.
Constant at church and change; his gains were sure,
His givings rare, gave farthings to the poor. Pope's Epistles.
2. To transmit from himself to another by hand, speech, or writing; to deliver; to impart; to communicate.
The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat. Gen. iii. 12.
They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage. Mat. xxiv. 38.
Those bills were printed not only every week, but also a general account of the whole year was given in upon the Thursday before Christmas. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
We shall give an account of these phenomena. Burnet.
Aristotle advises not poets to put things evidently false and impossible into their poems, nor gives them licence to run out into wildness. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.
3. To put into one's possession; to consign.
Nature gives us many children and friends, to take them away; but takes none away to give them us again. Temple.
Give me, says Archimedes, where to stand firm, and I will remove the earth. Temple.
If the agreement of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hands, or put a crown on his head, that almost must direct its conveyance. Locke.
4. To pay as price or reward, or in exchange.
All that a man hath will he give for his life. Job ii. 4.
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure. Shakespeare.
He would give his nuts for a piece of metal, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble. Locke.
5. To yield; not to withhold.
Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner what time he was drowsy, and seem'd to give small attention.
The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal:
the king, somewhat stirr'd, said, To whom do you appeal?
The prisoner answered, From Philip, when he gave no ear, to Philip, when he gave ear. Bacon's Apophthegms.
Constantia accus'd herself for having so tamely given an ear to the proposal. Addison's Spectator.
6. To quit; to yield as due.
Give place, thou stranger, to an honourable man. Ecclef.
7. To confer; to impart.
I will bless her, and give thee a son also of her. Gen. xvii.
Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself.
What beauties I lose in some places, I give to others which had them not originally. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
8. To expose.
All clad in skins of beasts the jav'lin bear;
Give to the wanton winds their flowing hair. Dryd. Æn.
9. To grant; to allow.
Tis given me once again to behold my friend. Rowe.
He has not given Luther fairer play. Atterbury.
10. To yield; not to deny.
I gave this wife proposal way;
Nay, urg'd him to go on: the shallow fraud
Will ruin him. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.
11. To yield without resistance.
12. To permit; to commission.
Prepare
The due libation and the solemn pray'r;
Then give thy friend to feed the sacred wine. Pope's Odyssey.
13. To enable; to allow.
God himself requir'd the lifting up of pure hands in prayers; and hath given the world to understand, that the wicked, although they cry, shall not be heard. Hooker.
Give me to know
How this foul rout began, who set it on. Shakef. Othello.
So some weak shoot, which else would poorly rise,
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts into the skies;
Through the new pulpit soft'ring juices flow,
Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to blow. Tickel.
14. To pay.
The applause and approbation, most reverend for thy stretchout life, I give to both your speeches. Shak. Trill. and Cressida.
15. To utter; to vent; to pronounce.

GIV

- So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And he that suffers. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
The Rhodians seeing their enemies turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision of them. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
Let the first honest discoverer give the word about, that Wood's halpence have been offered, and caution the poor people not to receive them. Swift.
16. To exhibit; to express.
This instance gives the impossibility of an eternal existence in any thing essentially alterable or corruptible. Hale.
17. To exhibit as the product of a calculation.
The number of men being divided by the number of ships, gives four hundred and twenty-four men a-piece. Arbutnot.

and comes to battle, like a dictator from the plough. Dryden.
I have some business of importance with her; but her husband is so horribly given to be jealous. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.
What can I refuse to a man so charitably given? Dryden.
21. To resign; to yield up.
Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wilderness of waters, without victual, we gave ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death. Bacon's New Atlantis.
Who say, I care not, those I give for lost;
And to intrude them, will not quit the cost. Herbert.
Virtue giv'n for lost,
Deprest and overthrown, as seem'd;
Like that self-begot'n bird
In the Arabian woods embost,
That no second knows, nor third,
And lay erewhile a holocaust,
From out her ashy womb now teem'd. Milton's Agonistes.
Since no deep within her gulph can hold
Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fall'n,
I give not heaven for lost. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to lift himself a martyr. South.
Ours gives himself for gone; you've watch'd your time,
He fights this day unarm'd, without his rhyme. Dryden.
The parents, after a long search for the body, gave him for drowned in one of the canals. Addison's Spectator.
As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back, in so much that the people gave him for gone. Addison's Guardian.
22. To conclude; to suppose.
Whence came you here, O friend, and whither bound?
All gave you lost on far Cyclopean ground. Garth's Ovid.
23. To Give away. To alienate from one's self; to make over to another; to transfer.
The more he got, the more he shew'd that he gave away to his new mistress, when he betrayed his promises to the former. Sidney, b. ii.
If you shall marry,
You give away this hand, and that is mine;
You give away heav'n's vows, and those are mine;
You give away myself, which is known mine. Shakespeare. Honest

GIV

Honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself.
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife. Shakespeare.
I know not how they sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Love gives away all things, that so he may advance the interest of the beloved person. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
But we who give our native rights away,
And our enslav'd posterity betray,
Are now reduc'd to beg an alms, and go
On holidays to see a puppet-show. Dryden's Juvenal's Sat.
Alas, said I, man was made in vain! How is he given away to misery and mortality! Addison's Spectator, N^o. 159.
Theodosius arrived at a religious house in the city, where Constantia resided, and made himself one of the order, with a private vow never to inquire after Constantia, whom he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to have been solemnized. Addison's Spectat.
Whatever we employ in charitable uses, during our lives, is given away from ourselves: what we bequeath at our death, is given from others only, as our nearest relations. Atterbury.

To death's benumbing opium, as my only cure. Milton.
Those troops, which were levied, have given over the prosecution of the war. Clarendon, b. viii.
But worst of all to give her over,
'Till she's as desperate to recover. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.
'Tis not amiss, e'er y' are giv'n o'er,
To try one desp'rate medicine more;
And where your case can be no worse,
The desp'ratest is the wisest course. Hudibras, p. ii.
A woman had a hen that laid every day an egg: she fancied that upon a larger allowance this hen might lay twice a day;
but the hen grew fat, and gave quite over laying. L'Estrange.
Many have given over their pursuits after fame, either from the disappointments they have met, or from their experience of the little pleasure which attends it. Addison's Spectator.
28. To GIVE over. To addict; to attach to.
Zelmane, govern and direct me; for I am wholly given over unto thee. Sidney, b. ii.

That, whilst he creeps, his vigorous thoughts can soar. Pope.
Not one foretells I shall recover;
But all agree to give me over. Swift.
30. To GIVE over. To abandon.
The duty of uniformity throughout all churches, in all manner of indifferent ceremonies, will be very hard, and therefore best to give it over. Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.
The cause, for which we fought and swore
So boldly, shall we now give o'er? Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.
31. To GIVE out. To proclaim; to publish; to utter.

GIV

The fathers give it out for a rule, that whatsoever Christ is said in Scripture to have received, the same we ought to apply only to the manhood of Christ. Hooker, b. v. f. 54.
It is given out, that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me. So the whole ear of Denmark
Is, by a forged process of my death, Rankly abused. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
One that gives out himself prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princely. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

to the Romans all their possessions in Sicily. Arbutnot.
Every one who will not ask for the conduct of God in the study of religion, has just reason to fear he shall be left of God, and given up a prey to a thousand prejudices, that he shall be consigned over to the follies of his own heart. Watts.
Give yourself up to some hours of leisure. Watts.
34. To GIVE up. To abandon.
If any be given up to believe lies, some must be first given up to tell them. Stillington's Def. of Diss. on Rom. Idol.
Our minds naturally give themselves up to every diversion which they are much accustomed to; and we always find that play, when followed with assiduity, engrosses the whole woman. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 120.
Give up your fond paternal pride, Swift.
Nor argue on the weaker side.
A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

GIV

I am obliged at this time to give up my whole application to Homer. Pope.
Persons who, through misfortunes, chuse not to dress, should not, however, give up neatness. Clarissa.

them up. Swift on the Dissent. in Athens and Rome.
To GIVE. v. n.
1. To rush; to fall on; to give the assault. A phrase merely French, and not worthy of adoption.
Your orders come too late, the fight's begun;
The enemy gives on with fury led. Dryden, Ind. Emp.
Hannibal gave upon the Romans. Hooker's Rom. Hist.
2. To relent; to grow moist; to melt or soften; to thaw.
Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow soft; as the crust of bread, bisket, sweetmeats, and salt. Bacon's Natural History.
Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like season'd timber, never gives;
But though the whole world turn to coal,
Then chiefly lives. Herbert.
Unless it is kept in a hot house, it will give again, that it will be little better than raw malt. Mortimer.
Before you carry your large cocks in, open them once, and spread them: hay is apt to give in the cock. Mortimer.
3. To move. A French phrase.
Up and down he traverses his ground,
Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on amain. Daniel's C. War.
4. To GIVE in. To go back; to give way.
The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in. Haywood.
5. To GIVE in to. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.
This is a geography particular to the medallists: the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explication of it. Addison on Medals.
This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament. Pope.
The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.
6. To GIVE off. To cease; to forbear.
The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reached the mind.
Locke on Education.
7. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.
If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker, b. iii.
Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; left, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker, b. v.
Give not o'er for: to him again; intreat him,
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
The state of human actions is so variable, that to try things off, and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon's Apophthegms.
So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse Met ever, and to shameful silence brought,
Yet gives not o'er, though desperate of success. Milton.
Shall we kindle all this flame
Only to put it out again?
And must we now give o'er,
And only end where we begun?
In vain this mischief we have done,
If we can do no more. Denham.
It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any farther pursuits after fame. Addison.
He coined again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift.
8. To GIVE out. To publish; to proclaim.
Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one. Acts viii. 9.

him not. Bacon, Essay 60.
Your ill-wishers will give out you are now going to quit your school. Swift.
9. To GIVE out. To cease; to yield.
We are the earth; and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about:
And till they foot and clutch their prey;
They never cool, much less give out, Herbert.

GLA

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout,
That for twenty denials you would not give out. Swift.
To GIVE way. To yield; not to resist; to make room for.
Private respects, with him, gave way to the common good. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Perpetual pushing and assurance put a difficulty out of countenance, and make a seeming impossibility give way. Collier.
Scarce had he spoken when the cloud gave way;
The mists flew upward, and dissolv'd in day. Dryden, Æn.
His golden helm gives way with stony blows.
Batter'd and flat, and beaten to his brows. Dryden's Æn.
GIVER, n. f. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower;
distributor; granter.
Well we may afford
Our givers their own gifts. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
By thee how fairly is the giver now
Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost
Long since. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. iv.
I have not liv'd since first I heard the news;
The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
Both gifts destructive to the givers prove;
Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.
GIZZARD, n. f. [gizier, French; gigeria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzern.
1. The strong muscular stomach of a fowl.
Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzarne. More.
In birds there is no mastication in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glandules distilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or muscular stomach. Ray.
Fluttering there they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own;
By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.
2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind;
as, he frets his gizzard, he harasses his imagination.
But that which does them greatest harm,
Their spiritual gizzards are too warm;
Which puts the overheated fets
In fevers still. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 11.
Satisfaction and restitution lie so curdled hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that the blood in their veins is not half so dear to them as the treasure they have in their coffers. L'Estrange.

Prepare the way, a God, a God appears! Pope's Messiah.
To GLAD, v. a. [from the adjective.] To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.
He

GLA

He saw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour
Of th' icy North; from frost-bound Atlas' hands
His adamant fethers fall: green vigour Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Lybian sands. Crashaw.
It glads me
To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice and dethrone oppression. Orway.
Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man. Pope.
If justice Philips' captive head
Some frigid rhymes disturbs,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.
To GLADDER. v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.
Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him. Addison's Cato.
A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her,
when she does not attend to it. Addison's Spectator.
GLADDER. n. s. [from glad.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.
Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,
Have pity, goddess. Dryden.
GLADE. n. s. [from glan, to be hot, or to shine; whence the Danish glad, and the obsolete English gleed, a red hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood. Lucas. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.
So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 11.
Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping lay in secret shade. Hubbard's Tale.
O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton.
For noonday's heat are closer arbours made,
And for fresh ev'ning air the op'ner glade. Dryd. Innocence.
There, interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.
By the heroes armed shades,
Glittering through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh, take the husband, or restore the wife! Pope's St. Cecil.
GLADDER. n. s. [from gladius, Latin, a sword.] Swordgrass: a GLADDER. } general name of plants that rise with a broad blade like sedge. Junius.

Of all his gladfulness, and kingly joyance. Spenser.
GLADIATOR. n. s. [Latin; gladiator, Fr.] A swordplayer;
a prizefighter.
Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denham.
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden's Pers.
GLADLY. adv. [from glad.] Joyfully; with gayety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.
For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakespeare's King Lear.
You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of. Blount to Pope.
GLADNESS. n. s. [from glad.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.
By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had froze before:
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the perill'd they deplore. Dryden.
GLAD SOME. adj. [from glad.]
1. Pleased; gay; delighted.
The highest angels to and fro descend,
From highest heaven in glad some company. Fairy Queen.
The glad some ghosts in circling troops attend,
And with unwearied eyes behold their friend:
Delight to hover near. Dryden's Æn. b. iv.
2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety.
Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
Of opening heav'n they sung and glad some day. Prior.
GLAD SOME LY. adv. [from glad some.] With gayety and delight.
GLAD SOME NESS. n. s. [from glad some.] Gayety; showiness; delight.
GLAIRE. n. s. [glair, Saxon; glar, Danish; glafs, glair, French; glaira, Latin.]

GLA

1. The white of an egg.
Take the glaire of eggs, and strain it as short as water, Peacham on Drawing. Di.
2. A kind of halbert.
To GLAIRE. v. a. [glairer, French; from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.
GLANCE. n. s. [glantz, German, glitter.]
1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.
His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n
Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam:
The other's not; for his was not sincere. Milt. Parad. Lost.
2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.
The aspects which procure love are not gazings, but sudden glances and dartings of the eye. Bacon's Nat. History.
There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.
The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Wait's Improvement of the Mind.
To GLANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.
He double blows about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil use,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. Fai. Queen.
When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,
Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rouse.
2. To fly off in an oblique direction.
He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright. Shakespeare.
3. To strike in an oblique direction.
Pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downwards near his flank descends. Pope.
4. To view with a quick cast of the eye; to play the eye.
O' th' sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and sigh and glance;
Then dance again, and kiss. Suckling.
Mighty dulness crown'd,
Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant round;
And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dunce. Pope's Dunciad.
The cooing dove
Flies thick in am'rous chace, and wanton rolls
The glancing eye, and turns the changeful scene. Thomson.
5. To censure by oblique hints.
How can't thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolita,
Knowing I know thy love to Thebes? Shakespeare.
Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon, Essay 23.
I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of his holiness and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Addison's Spect.
It was objected against him that he had written verses, wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor, famous for dulness. Swift.
To GLANCE. v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shak. Mer. of Ven.
GLANCINGLY. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.
Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but brokenly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewill on Providence.
GLAND. n. s. [glans, Latin; gland, French.]
All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.
I observed the abscess to have begun deep in the body of the glands. Wiseham's Surgery.
The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twist'd with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackm. Creation.
GLANDERS. n. s. [from gland.] In a horse, is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green or black. Farrier's Dict.

GLA

His horse is possess'd with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
GLANDIFEROUS. adj. [glans and fero, Latin.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.
The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandiferous trees. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GLANDULE. n. s. [glandula, Latin; glandule, Fr.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.
Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivales. Key.
GLANDULOSITY. n. s. [from glandulosus.] A collection of glands.
In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
GLANDULOUS. adj. [glandulosus, Latin; glanduleux, Fr. from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; subsisting in the glands;
having the nature of glands.
There are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emundatories.
Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours and ruptures of the lymphatick, and all the diseases thereon dependent. Arbutnot on Aliments.
To GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]
1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.
After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,
And like the brand of foul Alecco flame. Fairfax, b. ii.
He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and gross hyperboles; he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryden.
The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to sight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden's Æn.
Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.
2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.
Avant, and quit my sight! let the earth hide thee!
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Look, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met they made a fury stand,
And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd,
And with'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryd. Fables.
3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much laboured lustre.
The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest, or most correct. Felton on the Classics.
To GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.
One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glar'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurs'd, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.
GLARE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.
The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryd. Fables.
I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the mornings, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flambeaux. Addison's Guardian.
Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. Pope's Rock of the Lock.
2. A fierce piercing look.
About them round,
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milt. Parad. Lost.
GLAREOUS. adj. [glareux, Fr. glareux, Latin, from glaire.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.
GLARING. adj. Applied to any thing very shocking: as, a glaring crime.
GLASS. n. s. [glaz, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pezon imagines from glaz, British, green. In Erse it is called klann, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.
1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.
The word glafs cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glafs, from the verb glaffen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peascham on Drawing.
Glass is thought to compact and firm a body that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.
Show'rs of granadoes rain, by sudden burst

GLA

Disploding murd'rous bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glafs and nitrous grain adust. Phillips.
2. A glafs vessel of any kind.
I'll see no more;
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glafs
Which shews me many more. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
3. A looking-glass; a mirror.
He was the mark and glafs, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. Shakespeare's Henry IV, p. ii.
He spreads his subtle nets from light,
With twinkling glases, to betray
The larks that in the meadows light. Dryden's Horace.
4. An Hour GLASS. A glafs used in measuring time by the flux of sand.
Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glafs. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
5. A cup of glafs used to drink in.
To this last costly treaty,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glafs
Did break i' th' rinsing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glafs, be sure
'Tis time to shun it. Phillips.
6. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glafs; a draught.
While a man thinks one glafs more will not make him drunk, that one glafs hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor's Rule of living bly.
The first glafs may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.
7. A perspective glafs.
Like those who have survey'd the moon by glases, I can only tell of a new and shining world above us; but not relate the riches and glories of the place. Dryden.
GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glafs.
Get thee glafs eyes;
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou do'st not. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Glafs bottles are more fit for this second sining than those of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To GLASS. v. a.
1. To see as in a glafs; to represent as in a glafs or mirror.
Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glafs mine own debility. Sidney, b. ii.
2. To case in glafs.
Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tending their own worth, from whence they were glaz'd,
Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shakespeare.
3. To cover with glafs; to glaze.
I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glaz'd over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.
GLASSFURNACE. n. s. [glafs and furnace.] A furnace in which glafs is made by liquefaction.
If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glassfurnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.
GLASSGAZING. adj. [glafs and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.
A whorson, glassgazing, superfluous, finical rogue. Shakespeare's King Lear.
GLASSGRINDER. n. s. [glafs and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glafs.
The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.
GLASSHOUSE. n. s. [glafs and house.] A house where glafs is manufactured.
I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
GLASSMAN. n. s. [glafs and man.] One who sells glafs.
The profit of glases consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift.
GLASSMETAL. n. s. [glafs and metal.] Glafs in fusion.
Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
GLASSWORK. n. s. [glafs and work.] Manufacture of glafs.
The crystalline Venice glafs is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashe of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; and is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks. Bacon's Natural History.
GLASSWORK.

GLE

GLASSWORT. n. f. [salicornia, or saltwort.]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves: these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which for the most part contain one seed. The species are two. These plants grow on the sea-coasts in many parts of Europe, and upon the shores in several places of England which are washed every tide with the salt water. The inhabitants, near the sea-coast where these plants grow, cut them up toward the latter end of Summer, when they are fully grown; and, after having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp, and are promiscuously gathered for use. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, much used by the chymists.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assu'd:
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heav'n,
As makes the angels weep. Shaksp. Meas. for Measure.

There is a willow grows allant a brook,
That shews his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shak. Ham.
The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing-dust. Brown.
Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandys.

A hundred sweep,
With stretching oars, the glassy deep. Dryden's Æn.
GLASTONBURY Thorn. n. f. A species of MEDLAR, which tree. This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring, and in no other respect differs from the common hawthorn. Miller.

GLAUCOMA. n. f. [γλαυκωμα; glaucoma, French.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.
The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

GLAIVE. n. f. [glaiue, French; glais, a hook, Welsh. Glauve is Eric for a broad sword.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,
Not surely arm'd in steel or iron fear;
But each a glaive had pendant by his side. Fairfax, b. i.
When zeal, with aged clubs and glaives,
Gave chase to rockets and white flaves. Hudibras, p. iii.

TO GLAYER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; glapan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glaving council is as dangerous on the one hand as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician is on the other. L'Estrange's Fables.

TO GLAZE. v. a. [To glass, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hang'd, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon's Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glâser, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.
Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shaksp. R. II.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it found reason that carries the stroke home. Grew's Cosm. Sac. b. ii. c. 6.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glazier, or glazier, of glais.]

One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

The dextrous glazier strong returns the bound,
And ginsling fathes on the penthouse found. Gay's Trivia.

GLEAD. n. f. A buzzard hawk; a kite. It retains that name in Scotland.GLEAM. n. f. [geloma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

GLE

At last a gleam

Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercaft. Dryd. Aureng.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison's Cata.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green. Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
Around the dreary coast,
But dreadful gleams,
Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe. Pope's St. Cecilia.

To GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To shine with sudden confection.

Observant of approaching day,
The meek-eyed morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled East. Thomson's Summer.

Ye gleamings of departed peace
Shine out your last. Thomson's Spring.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vista through the trees. Thomson.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden confections of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way. Pope.

TO GLEAN. v. a. [glaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.
She came and glean'd in the field after the reapers. Ruth ii.
Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd. Dryden.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palemon's fields. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather
So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shaksp. Hamlet.

That goodness
Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion. Shak. H. VIII.

They glean'd of them in the highways five thousand men. Judas, xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his reluctant arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Lach.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by low degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleams of yellow thyme diffend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virg. Georg. b. iv.

GLEANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.
For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomson's Autumn.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.
An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman, and as much superior to him, as a man conversant about the court is to a shopkeeper. Locke.

GLEANNING. n. f. [from glean.] The act of gleanings, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleanings of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury's Sermons.

GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If odorous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the Sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping

GLI

Sleeping vegetables lie,

*Till the glad summons of a genial ray

Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day. Garth.
2. The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tithes, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespas done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ayliffe's Paragon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.
GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage flat or fruitless, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flat'ry! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prior.

GLEBE. n. f. [gleazbe, Saxon.] A kite.

Ye shall not eat the glebe, the kite, and the vulture. Danti.
GLEE. n. f. [gligge, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee. Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of their privilege; who again foretell not to baigne them with perfume. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

And his sportive limbs,
This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee
Their frolics play. Thomson's Spring.

No happiness is now reserv'd for me. Gay's Pastorals.
GLEED. n. f. [from glopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful.
My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast? Shaksp.peare.

GLEEK. n. f. [gligge, Saxon.] Musick; or musician.
What will you give us?—No money, but the gleek: I will give you the minstrel. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

TO GLEEK. v. a. [glizman, in Saxon, is a mimic or a droll.]
1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.
I can gleek upon occasion. Shaksp. Midst. Night's Dream.

I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shaksp.peare's Henry V.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.

TO GLEEN. v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam.

Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe, Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour, Prior.

GLEET. n. f. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from glean, Saxon, to run fastly.] A fanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

There then lay a hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet. Wise's Surgery.

TO GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To drip or ooze with a thin fanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops. Wise's Surgery.

2. To run slowly.
Vapours may be raised by the sun in such quantities as are sufficient to make clouds, which are carried up and down the various places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the rocky caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow and stony, afford them a basin. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

GLEETV. adj. [from gleet.] Ichory; thinly fanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleetv, you may suspect it corrupting. Wise's Surgery.

GLENN. n. f. [gleann, Irish.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen. Spenser.

GLEW. n. f. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by digesting the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB. adj. [from glis, Skinner.]
1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Habakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slept as glib as a birdcatcher's gin. Jerusha's notes.

2. Smooth; voluble.
I want that glib and oily art

Indentures, covenants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. Poor painters of with filly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney, b. ii.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespere's Henry VI.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Milton.

3. Superficial lustre. His iron coat, all over grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glittering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Fai. Queen.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shaksp.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Shaksp. The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon's Physic. Rom.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss, Like that of oil. Chapman's Iliads, b. xviii.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South's Sermons.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the Spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 412.

To GLOSS. v. n. [glosser, Fr. from the noun]

1. To comment. Thou detain'st Brice's in thy bands,
By priestly glossing on the gods commands. Dryd. Fables.
2. To make fly remarks. Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment. No woman shall succeed in Salique land;
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloss
To be the realm of France. Shakespere's Henry V.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Dennis.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation. Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Philips's Britain.- 3. To embellish with superficial lustre. But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou do'st retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a faint like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and fill a slave. Dryden's Pers.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, the most learned of the Romans, when deliberum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulachrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries.

I could

GLO

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.

GLOSSA'TOR. n. f. [glossateur, French, from glossa.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

GLO'SSER. n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.
2. A polisher. Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Those grains were as like little cubes as if they had been made by a skilful jeweller, and their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLO'SSOGRAPH. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γραφω.] A scholiast; a commentator.

GLO'SSOGRAPHY. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γραφω.] The writing of commentaries.

GLO'SSY. adj. [from glossa.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place: he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water-camblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

His furcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden's Virgil.

GLOVE. n. f. [Gloze, Saxon, from klafus, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

Like an uproar in a town,
Before them every thing went down;
They flew about like chaff I th' wind;
For haste some left their masks behind,
Some could not flay their gloves to find. Drayton.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespere's Henry IV. p. i.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That almshouse of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glow'd. Cleaveland.

GLOVE. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glove's paring knife?
Shakespere's Merry Wives of Windsor.

To GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look fullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and breaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glowing round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Gloating with fullen sight, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.

To GLOW. v. n. [Glopan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame. But silence silence lessens not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Fairy Queen, b. i.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and muffers of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Their office upon a tawny front. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocence, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milt. Par. L.

2. To burn with vehement heat. Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mottled feeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addis. Ovid.

How op'ning heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe. Pope.

3. To feel heat of body. Did not my temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addis. Cato.

The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands. Gay.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour. With smile that glow'd Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.

GLO

Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow, from his
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole.
From her naked limbs of glowing white,
In folds loose floating, fell the fainter lawn. Thomson.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy. You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison's Cato.

Forc'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies furrowed,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion. A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a fullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shaksp.

GLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.
2. Vehemence of passion.
3. Brightness or vividness of colour. The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakspere.

A waving glow his bloomy beds displays
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope, Epistle iv.

GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm.] A small creeping insect with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakspere.

The glowworm shews the matten to be near,
And 'gins to pale his unreflectual fire. Shaksp. Hamlet.

A great light drowns it a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon's Natural History.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, till by the springing day
Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

To GLOZE. v. n. [glezan, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn. Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

So glow'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milt. Par. Lost.

A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glozing speech,
2. To comment. This should be gloss.
Which Salique land the French unjustly glaze. Shakspere's Henry V.

To be the realm of France,

Gloze.

GLU

GLOZE, n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Flattery; insinuation.
 Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shakespeare.
 2. Specious show; gloss.
 Precious couches full oft are shak'd with a fever;
 If then a bodily evil in a bodily glose be not hidden,
 Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Sidney, b. i.
GLUE, n. f. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.
 Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terreftrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Natural History.
 To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
 And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.
 The clearest, driest, and most transparent glue is the best.
Mason's Meth. Exor.
 The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.
TO GLUE, v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To join with a viscous cement.
 I fear thy overthrow
 More than my body's parting with my soul:
 My love and fear glue many friends to thee. Shakespeare, H.VI.
 Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glues a pottherd together. Ecclus. xxii. 7.
 The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinseled crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvas over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.
 Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Dryden.
 2. To hold together.
 The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest, that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton's Opt.
 3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.
 Those waifs in a honey-pot are so many sensual men, that are plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange, Fable 126.
 Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson's Sermons.
 She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
 And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
 Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glue
 Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.
 I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
 And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms. Pope.
GLUE-BOILER, n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.
GLUER, n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.
GLUM, adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.]
 Sullen; stubbornly grave.
 Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well, what then? Guardian.
TO GLUT, v. a. [englutir, French; glutis, Lat. to swallow;
glutis.]
 1. To swallow; to devour.
 Till cram'd and gorg'd, night burst
 With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
 2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to faze; to disgust.
 The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.
 Love breaks friendship, whose delights
 Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.
 What way remove
 His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
 That he may look propitious on our toils,
 And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dry.
 No more, my friend;
 Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æn.
 I found
 The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
 Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
 Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Prior.
 3. To feast or delight even to satiety.
 With death's carcass glut the grave. Milton.
 His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
 Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.
 A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
 Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
 With one full prospect; but invites by many,
 To view at last the whole. Dryden's State of Innocence.
 4. To overfill; to load.

GLU

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbutnot's Art of Politic Lying.
 5. To saturate.
 The menstrum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Boyle.
GLUT, n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. That which is gorged or swallowed.
 Disgorging foul
 Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
 Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
 2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.
 So death
 Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
 Be forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange, Fable 11.
 A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.
 3. More than enough; overmuch.
 If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
 4. Any thing that fills up a passage.
 The water some suppose to pass continually from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs and rivers, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage.
Woodward's Natural History.
GLUTINOUS, adj. [glutimex, French, from gluten, Latin.]
 Gluey; viscous; tenacious.
 The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 900.
 Next this marble venom'd seat,
 Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.
 Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbutnot on Aliments.
GLUTINOUSNESS, n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.
 There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Boyle.
GLUTTON, n. f. [glutton, French, from glutis, Latin, to swallow.]
 1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.
 The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsflesh baked. Bacon's Natural History.
 Through Macer's gullet she runs down,
 When the vile glutton dines alone;
 And, void of modesty and thought,
 She follows Bibo's endless draught. Prior.
 2. One eager of any thing to excess.
 The rest bring home in state the happy pair
 To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
 All those free joys insatiably to prove,
 With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.
Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
 Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Graville.
TO GLUTTONISE, v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton;
 to be luxurious.
GLUTTONOUS, adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.
 When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
 And take down th' interest in their gluttonous maws. Shakespeare.
 The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.
 Thou well observe
 The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
 In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, not glutinous delight. Milton's Par. Lost.
GLUTTONOUSLY, adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.
GLUTTONY, n. f. [gluttonie, Fr. from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.
 Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
 On citron tables or Atlantic stone. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Well may they fear some miserable end,
 Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden's Juven.
 The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.
GLUTY, adj. [from glue.]
 2. Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

GNO

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a glue (spurious matter. Harvey on Confluxions.
 With glue wax some new foundations lay. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.
 Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.
 Whatever is the composition of the vapour, let it have but one quality of being very glue or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.
GLIN, n. f. [Irish; glann, ghyn, plur. Erle; glenn, Scottish.]
 A hollow between two mountains.
 Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut them up within those narrow corners and ghyns under the mountains foot. Spenser's State of Ireland.
TO GNAR, v. n. [gnynnan, Saxon; gnarren, Dutch.] To growl; to growl; to murmur; to snarl.
 When he gan to rear his bristles strong,
 And felly gnar, until day's enemy
 Did him appease. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 1.
 Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
 And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first. Shakespeare.
 Gnawing sorrow hath less power to bite
 The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shakespeare, R. II.
 The gnarling porter durst not whine for doubt;
 Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Fairfax.
GNARLED, adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks.] Knotty.
 Merciful heav'n!
 Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolts
 Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
 Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
TO GNASH, v. a. [knaschen, Dutch.] To strike together; to clash.
 The fear, who could not yet his wrath assuage,
 Rowl'd his green eyes, that spark'd with his rage,
 And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden's Virg. Georg.
TO GNASH, v. n.
 1. To grind or collide the teeth.
 He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Pf. exil. 10.
 There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Mat. viii.
 2. To rage even to collision of the teeth; to fume; to growl.
 His great iron teeth he still did grind,
 And grimly gnash'd, threatening revenge in vain. Fair. Queen.
 They gnash'd upon me with their teeth. Pf. xxxv. 16.
 They him laid
Gnashing for anguish, and despite and flame,
 To find himself not matchless. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 With boiling rage Atides burn'd,
 And foam betwix his gnashing grinders churn'd. Dryden.
GNAT, n. f. [gnæ, Saxon.]
 1. A small winged stinging insect.
 Her whip of cricket's bone, the lash of life;
 Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat. Shakespeare, Rom. and Ju.
 2. Any thing proverbially small.
 Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel. Mat. xxiii. 24.
GNATFLOWER, n. f. [gnat and flower.] A flower otherwise called the bee-flower.
GNATSNAPPER, n. f. [gnat and snapper.] A bird so called, because he lives by catching gnats.
 They deny that any bird is to be eaten whole, but only the gnat snapper. Hakewill on Providence.
TO GNAW, v. a. [gnagan, Saxon; knaghen, Dutch.]
 1. To eat by degrees; to devour by slow corrosion.
 To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw Young soldiers at their exercises gnaw. Dryden's Juvenal.
 2. To bite in agony or rage.
 Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
 Some bloody passion shakes your very frame. Shakespeare, Othello.
 They gnaw'd their tongues for pain. Rev. xvi. 10.
 He comely fell, and dying gnaw'd the ground. Dryden.
 3. To wear away by biting.
 Gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
 I gain'd my freedom. Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors.
 Like rotten fruit I fall, worn like a cloth
 Gnaw'd into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.
 A lion, hamper'd in a net, called to a mouse to help him out of the snare: the mouse gnaw'd the threads to pieces, and set the lion at liberty. L'Estrange.
 4. To fret; to waste; to corrode.
 To pick with the teeth.
 His bones clean pick'd; his very bones they gnaw'd. Dryden.
TO GNAW, v. n. To exercise the teeth.
 I might well, like the panicle, gnaw upon the chain that ties him; but I should sooner mar my teeth than procure liberty. Sidney.
 See the hell of having a false woman: my bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnaw'd at. Shakespeare.
 I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
 A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon. Shakespeare, R. III.
GNAWER, n. f. [from gnaw.] One that gnaws.
GNOMON, n. f. [gnomon.] The hand or pin of a dial.
 The gnomon of every dial is supposed to represent the axis of the world, and therefore the two ends or extremities thereof must directly answer to the North and South pole. Harris.
 There were from great antiquity sun-dials, by the shadow of a style or gnomon, denoting the hours of the day. Brown.
GNOMONICKS, n. f. [gnomonics.] A science, which makes a part of the mathematicks: it teaches to find the just proportion of shadows for the construction of all kinds of sun and moon dials, and for knowing what o'clock it is by means thereof; as also of a gnomon or stile, that throws off the shadow for this purpose. Trevoux.

 That sits on yonder bank,
 Whose straying herd themselves doth shrowd
 Among the bushes rank? Spenser's Pastoral.
 They first gave the goat-herd good contentment, and the marquis and his servant chafed the kid about the slack Wotton.
GOAT-MARJORAM. n. f. The same with GOAT-SREAD, which see.
- GOAT-MILK.* n. f. [goat and milk.]
 After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goat-milk may be necessary. Wise's Surgery.
- GOAT-MILKER.* n. f. [goat and milk.] A kind of owl lo-called from sucking goats. Baile.
- GOATS RUE.* n. f. [goat and rue.]
 It hath a perennial root: the leaves grow by pairs, fastened to a mid-rib, terminating in an odd lobe: the flower is of the papilionaceous kind, consisting of a standard, the wings, and the keel: the point becomes a long taper pod, which is filled with oblong kidney-shaped seeds. This plant is propagated for medicinal use. Miller.

Goat

GOB

- Goat's rue* is a native of Italy, and some parts of Spain, where it has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorifick: the Italians eat it raw and boiled, and make a kind of tea of it; but with us it is of no esteem. Hill.
- GOATSKIN.* n. f. [goat and skin.]
 They wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, and tormented. Hebr. ii. 37.
 Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hands divine;
 With water one, and one with fable wine. Pope's Odyssey.
- GOAT-THORN.* n. f. [goat and thorn.]
 It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of which empalement arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a bicapular pod filled with kidney-shaped seeds: the leaves grow by pairs on a middle rib, which always end in a thorn. Tournefort says the gum adragant, or dragon, is produced in Crete. Miller.
- GOAT-TISH.* adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any qualities: as, rankness; lust.
 An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shak. King Lear.
 The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal. More against Abelsm.
- GOB.* n. f. [gob, French.] A small quantity. A low word.
 Do! think I have a little wit as to part with such a gob of money? L'Estrange.
- GOBLET.* n. f. [gobe, French.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.
 Therewith the spew'd out of her filthy maw
 A flood of poison, horrible and black,
 Full of great lumps of sth and goblets raw. Fairy Queen.
 By devilish policy art thou grown great,
 And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd
 With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart. Shak. H. VI.
 The cooks, slicing it into little goblets, prick it on a prog of iron, and bang it in a furnace. Sandys's Travels.
 The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
 Lay stretcht at length, and flooring in his den,
 Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
 With purple wine and cruddl'd gore confus'd. Addis.
- To GOBBET.* v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouth-
 ful. A low word.
 Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and goblets up both together. L'Estrange, Fable 4.
- To GOBBLE.* v. a. [gob, to swallow, old French.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.
 The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them. L'Estr.
 Of last year's corn in barn great store;
 Fat turkeys gobbling at the door. Prior.
 The time too precious now to waste,
 And supper gobbling up in haste,
 Again afresh to cards they run. Swift.
- GOBBLER.* n. f. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.
GOBETWEEN. n. f. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties.
 Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
- GOBELT.* n. f. [gobelt, French.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.
 My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakep. Rich. II.
 We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;
 But free from surfeits our repose is found. Danham.
 Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught;
 Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.
- GOBLIN.* n. f. [French; gobelin, which Spenser has once retained, writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that esse and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nukes with the name of the other: but it appears that esse is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Eliff Wyllon are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named Gobolds, from which gobelin might be derived.]
1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.
 Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
 Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
 Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell? Shak.
 To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd,
 Art thou that traitor angel? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
 Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.
2. A fairy; an elf.
 His son was Elfinel, who overcame
 The wicked gobelines in bloody field;
 But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
 Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
 With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
 With aged cramps. Shakespeare's Tempest.

GOD

- Mean time the village rouzes up the fire,
 While well attested, and as well believ'd,
 Heard solemn goes the goblin story round. Thomson's Winter.
- GOD.* n. f. [gob, Saxon, which likewise signifies god. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonic dialects.]
1. The Supreme Being God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John iv. 24.
God above
 Deal between thee and me: for ever now
 I put myself to thy direction. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Grew's Cosmol. Sacr. b. ii.
2. A false god; an idol.
 He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only,
 he shall be utterly destroyed. Exod. xxii. 19.
 As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
 They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre fways
 The freezing North, and Hyperborean seas,
 And Scythian colds, and Thracia's Winter coast,
 Where stand thy feeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryd.
3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.
 Whole end is destruction whole god is their belly. Phil. iii.
 I am not Licio,
 Nor a musician as I seem to be;
 But one that forns to live in this disguise,
 For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
 And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakespeare.
- To GOD.* v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.
 This last old man,
 Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
 Nay, god me, indeed. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- GO-CHILD.* n. f. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and pro-mitted to see educated as a Christian.
- GO-DAUGHTER.* n. f. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.
- GO-DESS.* n. f. [from god.] A female divinity.
 Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father! Shakep.
 A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
 Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
 My vow was earthy, thou a heav'nly love. Shakespeare.
 I long have waited in the temple nigh,
 Built to the gracious goddess Clemency;
 But reverence thou the pow'r. Dryden's Fables.
 From his seat the goddess born arose,
 And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden's Fables.
 When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty. Addis. on the Eveholder, N^o. 1.
 Modesty withheld the goddess's train. Pope's Odyssey.
- GO-DESS-LIKE.* adj. [goddess and like.] Resembling a goddess.
 Then female voices from the shore I heard;
 A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd. Pope's Odyssey.
- GO-DEATHER.* n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.
 He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfather to his child. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.
- GO-DEAD.* n. f. [from god.]
 1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature.
 Be content;
 Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift. Shakespeare's Cymbel.
 At the holy mount
 Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne
 Of godhead, fix'd for ever firm and sure,
 The filial pow'r arriv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
 So may thy godhead be confest,
 So the returning year be blest. Prior.
2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.
 Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
 Adoring first the genius of the place,
 The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown. Dryd. En.
- GO-DESS.* adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God;
 atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.
 Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker.
 That godless crew
 Rebellious. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 49.
 For

GOG

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

GO'DLIKE. adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.
Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild. Milt. Par. Lost.
Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of favour to mankind, and which way first Publish his godlike office now mature. Paradise Regain'd.
That prince shall be so wife and godlike, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Locke.

GO'DLING. n. f. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.
Thy puny godlings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with bras. Dryd. Juven.

GO'DLINESS. n. f. [from godly.]
1. Piety to God.
2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.
Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

GO'DLY. adj. [from god.]
1. Pious towards God.
Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.
2. Good; righteous; religious.
Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men. Pf. xii. 1.

GO'DLY. adv. Piously; righteously.
The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one which will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hooker, b. v.

GO'DLYHEAD. n. f. [from godly.] Goodness; righteousness.
An old word.
For this, and many more such outrage,
I crave your godlyhead to allwage.
The rancorous rigour of his might.
GO'DMOTHER. n. f. [god and mother.] A woman who has become sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

GO'DSHIP. n. f. [from god.] The rank or character of a god;
deity; divinity.
Discouraging largely on this theme,
O'er hills and dales their godships came. Prior.

GO'DSON. n. f. [god and son.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.
What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father named? your Edgar? Shakesp. K. Lear.

GO'DWARD. adj. To Godward is toward God. So we read,
Hac Arctus a tenus, for bacenus Arctus.
And such trust have we through Christ to Godward. 2 Cor.

GO'DWIT. n. f. [god, good, and wit, an animal.] A bird of particular delicacy.
Nor ortelans nor godwits crown his board. Cowley.

GO'DYELD. adv. [corrupted from God shield or protect.] A GO'DYELD. } term of thanks. Now not used.
Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godyeld us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakesp. Macbeth.

GO'EL. adj. [golern, Saxon.] Yellow. An old word.
In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hop-roots to well chosen let skilful go set;
The goeler and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tuff. Husb.

GO'ER. n. f. [from go.]
1. One that goes; a runner.
I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them
But goes backward. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.
The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

TO GO'GGLE. v. n. To look askint.
Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.
Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryd.

GO'GGLE-EYED. adj. [reel, egen, Saxon.] Squint-eyed; not looking straight.
They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly

GOL

to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

GO'ING. n. f. [from going.]
1. The act of walking.
When nobles are their taylor's tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenchers tutors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. Pregnancy.
The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going. Grew's Cosmol. Sacr. b. iii. c. 3.

3. Departure.
Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes
Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milt. P. Lost.

GOLA. n. f. The same with CYMATIUM, which see.

GOLA. n. f. In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentell, make a noble flow. Speir.

GOLD. n. f. [gold, Saxon; gold, riches, Welsh.] It is called gold in our English tongue either of gold, as Sta-liger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelden, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacocks on Drawing.

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies; not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt, and is most easily of all metals amalgamated with silver. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. It never constitutes a peculiar ore, but is found most frequently among ore of silver. Native gold is seldom found pure, but has almost constantly silver with it, and very frequently copper. Gold dust, or native gold, in small masses, is mixed among the sand of rivers in many parts of the world. It is found, in the greatest abundance, bedded in masses of hard stone, often at the depth of a hundred and fifty fathoms in the mines of Peru. Pure gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.
Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Nat. History.
Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakesp. Rich. III.
We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.
The gold fraught vessel, which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryd. Tyrant. Love.

2. Money.
For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakesp. Henry V.
Thou, that so stoutly hast resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shakesp. H. VI.
If I want gold, I feel but a beggar's dog,
And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold. Shakesp. Timon.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσόν, chrysos; and animam, mareque aureos dicit in ostris. Horace.
The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold;
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakesp. Henry V.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. f. [myagrum,] Miller.
It hath a flower of four leaves, placed in form of a cross, out of whose cup arises the pointal, which becomes a turbi-nated fruit, having one cell, in which is included an oblong seed, and two empty cells at the point.

GO'LDSEATER. n. f. [gold and seat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold so as to gild other matter.
Our goldseaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest coined gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Baile.
This gilder was a goldseater.
GO'LDSEATER'S SKIN. n. f. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.
When your gillflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife or lancet at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Morrimer's Husbandry.

GO'LDBOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.
Thy air,
Thou other goldbound brow, is like the first. Shakesp. Macbeth.

GOL

GO'DEN. adj. [from gold.]
1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.
O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shakesp. R. III.
Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.
So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep. Shakesp. As You Like It.
Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perked up in a glittering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Crowshaw.
To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
How'er he shines all golden to you now. Dryden.
And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Race's Royal Conv.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.
Golden rustling hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Martimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.
I have bought
Golden opinions from all sort of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloses,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakesp. Macbeth.
That verse which they commonly call golden, has two sub-stantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.
Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us. Watts's Logick.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.
They say many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.
Shakesp. As You Like It.

GO'DEN Saxifrage. n. f. [chrysephenium,] Miller.
It hath a perennial fibrose root: the flowercup is divided into four parts: the flower has no visible petals, but eight filaments, or threads, which surround the ovary: the pointal becomes a membranous vessel, which is forked and bivalve, inclosing many small seeds. It grows wild upon marshy soil, and in shady woods.

GO'DENLY. adv. [from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.
My brother Jacques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit. Shakesp. As You Like It.

GO'DFINCH. n. f. [golpinc, Saxon.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire a proud taylor.
Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks,
Canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.
A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

GO'DFINDER. n. f. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.
His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his vittels through a quill;
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or't had been happy for goldfinders. Swift.

GO'DHAMMER. n. f. A kind of bird. DiA.

GO'DING. n. f. A fort of apple. DiA.

GO'DNEY. n. f. A fort of fish, otherwise called GILTHEAD, which see. DiA.

GO'DPLEASURE. n. f. An herb. DiA.

GO'DSIZE. n. f. A glue of a golden colour; glue used by gilders.
The gum of ivy is good to put into your goldsize, and other colours. Peacocks on Drawing.

GO'DSMITH. n. f. [gold and smith, Saxon.]
1. One who manufactures gold.
Neither chain nor goldsmith came to me. Shakesp. As You Like It.

2. A banker; one who keeps money for others in his hands.
The goldsmith or scrivener, who takes all your fortune to dispose of, when he has beforehand resolv'd to break the following day, does surely deserve the gallows. Swift.

GO'DLOCKS. n. f. [cuma aurea, Latin.] Miller.
It hath a fibrose perennial root: its numerous leaves are produced alternately on every side the branches: the flowers are yellow, and produced either singly or in an umbel upon the tops of the branches.

GOLL. n. f. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from gal or pol, whence pealean, to handle or manage.] Hands; paws;
claws. Used in contempt, and obsolete.
They set hands, and Mopla put to her golden golls among them; and blind fortune, that saw not the colour of them, gave her the preeminence. Shakespeare, b. ii.

GOO

GOME. n. f. The black and oily grease of a cart-wheel. Bailey.

GO'MPHOSIS. n. f. A particular form of articulation.
Gomphosis is the connexion of a tooth to its socket. Wifem.

GO'NDOLA. n. f. [gondole, French.] A boat much used in Venice; a small boat.
He saw did swim
Along the shore, as swift as glance of eye,
A little gondole, bedecked trim
With boughs and arbours woven cunningly. Fairy Queen.
In a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
As with gondola's and men, his Good excellence the duke of Venice
Sails out, and gives the gulph a ring. Prior.

GONDOLIER. n. f. [from gondola.] A boatman; one that rows a gondola.
Your fair daughter,
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,
To the gross claps of a lascivious Moor. Shakesp. Othello.

GONE. part. preter. [from go. See TO GO.] As,
I need not qualify these remarks with a supposition that I have gone upon through the whole course of my papers. Addis.

1. Advanced; forward in progress.
I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, only by being put into broomlands. Mort.
The observator is much the brisker of the two, and, I think, farther gone of late in lyes and impudence than his Presbyterian brother. Swift.

2. Ruined; undone.
He must know 'tis none of your daughter, nor my sister;
we are gone else. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

3. Past.
I'll tell the story of my life,
And the particular accidents gone by,
Since I came to this isle. Shakesp. Tempest.

4. Lost; departed.
When her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas. Acts xvi. 19.
Speech is confined to the living, and imparted to only those that are in presence, and is transient and gone. Hilder.

5. Dead; departed from life.
I mourn Adonis dead and gone. Oldham.
A dog, that has his nose held in the vapour, loses all signs of life; but carried into the air, or thrown into a lake, recovers, if not quite gone. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

GO'NFALON. } n. f. [gonfalon, French; gonfana, Italian; gonfalon,] from gunn, a battle, and fani, a flag. Mr. Lye.
GO'NFANON. } An ensign; a standard.
Ten thousand thousand ensigns high advanc'd,
Standards and gonfalon, 'twixt van and rear,
Stream in the air. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. v.

GONORRHOEA. n. f. [γόνος and ῥοή.] A morbid running of venereal humors.
Rauty mummy or stone mummy grows on the tops of high rocks: they powder and boil it in milk, and then give it to stop gonorrhoeas. Woodward on Fossils.

GOOD. adj. comp. better, superl. best. [good, Saxon; good, Dutch.]

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will towards men. Lu. ii. 14.
Without good nature man is but a better kind of vermin. Bacon's Ornam. Ration.
- Here we are lov'd, and there we love;
Good nature now and passion strive
Which of the two should be above,
And laws unto the other give. Suckling.
'Tis no wonder if that which affords so little glory to God, hath no more good will for men. Decay of Piety.
When you shall see him, sir, to die for pity,
'Twere such a thing, 'twould so deceive the world,
'Twould make the people think you were good natur'd. Dan.
To teach him betimes to love and be good natur'd to others, is to lay early the true foundation of an honest man. Locke.
Good sense and good nature are never separated, though the ignorant world has thought otherwise. Dryd. Juven. Deduct.
Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original signification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of daily use.
This doctrine of God's will towards men, this command of mens proportionable good will to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very spirit and life of our Saviour's whole institution?
It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind.
How could you chide the young good natur'd prince,
And drive him from you with so stern an air. Add. Cat.
26. Favourable; loving.
But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt. 1 Sa. xxv. 15.
Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart. Pf. lxxiii. 1.
You have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you. 1 Thess. iii. 6.
This idea, thus made, and laid up for a pattern, must necessarily be adequate, being referred to nothing else but itself, nor made by any other original but the good liking and will of him that first made this combination. Locke.
27. Companionable; sociable; merry. Often used ironically.
It was well known, that Sir Roger had been a good fellow in his youth. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well. Clarendon, b. viii.
Not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship. Locke.
28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of slight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill.
My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable; virtue; righteousness; piety.
Depart from evil, and do good. Pf. xxxiv. 14.
Empty of all good, wherein consists Woman's domestick honour, and chief praise. Milt. P. L.
By good, I question not but good, morally so called, bonum bonifum ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure the bonum utile, or jucundum, hardly come into any account here.
Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight
For virtue, honour, and for noble blood,
Truth, honour, all that is compriz'd in good. Dryden.
5. Good placed after bad, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See GOOD adv.
The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves. South's Sermons.
Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in a wilderness as in a society. L'Estrange.

The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain.
GO'SHAWK. n. f. [gorz, goole, and papoc, a hawk.] A hawk of a large kind.
Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at go'shawks flight aghast.
GO'SLING. n. f. [from goose.]
1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.
Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hipshot? says the goose to her gosling.
Nature hath instructed even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads.
2. A cat's tail on nut-trees and pines.
GOSPEL. n. f. [gospel, or God's or good tidings; εὐαγγέλιον; gospel, gospel, happy tidings, Erse.]
1. God's word; the holy book of the Christian revelation.
Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first begun.
How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel!
2. Divinity; theology.
To GOSPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakespeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gospellers, who had long been held in contempt.
Are you to gospel d
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave?
GO'SPELLER. n. f. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Wickliff, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the Papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.
These gospellers have had their golden days,
Have trodden down our holy Roman faith.
GO'SSAMER. n. f. [gossamium, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of Autumn.
A lover may beltride the gossamer,
That idles in the wanton Summer air,
And yet not fall, so light is vanity.
Had'st thou been aught but gossamer, feathers, air,
So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou'd'st shiver'd like an egg.
Four nimble gnats the gossamer were,
Their harnesses of gossamer.
The filmy gossamer now flits no more,
Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore.
GO'SSIP. n. f. [from gob and ryb, relation, affinity, Saxon.]
1. One who answers for the child in baptism.
Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me,
After so long grief such nativity.
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.
At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips.
2. A timpling companion.
And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab,
And when she drinks against her lips I bob.
3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.
To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour.
—'Tis sung in ev'ry street,
The common chat of gossips when they meet.

GOV

To GO'SSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.
Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me.
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.
His mother was a votress of my order,
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often bath the gossips by my side.
The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossippings not be robbed of their ancient privilege.
2. To be a pot-companion.
Nor met with fortune, other than at feasts,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossipping.
GO'SSIPPED. n. f. [gossipy, from gossip.]
Gossiped or compaternity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent.
GO'STING. n. f. An herb.
GO'T. pret. [from the verb get.]
Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius got off.
If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
Though foul Therites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd.
These regions and this realm my wars have got;
This mournful empire is the loser's lot.
When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark.
GO'T. part. pass. of get.
Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason.
Let him boast
His knowledge of good lost, and evil got.
A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do.
If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world?
Thou wert from Aetna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder born.
GO'TTEN. part. pass. of get.
Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold.
Few of them, when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it.
GOUD. n. f. Woad: a plant.
GOVE. n. f. A mow.
To GOVE. v. n. To mow; to put in a gove, goff, or mow.
An old word.
Load safe, carry home, follow time being fair,
Gove just in the barn, it is out of despair.
To GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French; gubernare, Latin.]
1. To rule as a chief magistrate.
This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external.
Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men.
2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.
The welfare of that is the chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions.
3. To manage; to restrain.
Go after her, she's desperate; govern her.
4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax: as, amo governs the accusative case.
5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.
To GOVERN. v. n. To keep superiority; to behave with haughtiness.
By that rule,
Your wicked atoms may be working now
To give bad counsel, that you still may govern.
GOVERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule; obedient; manageable.
The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe.
GOVERNANCE. n. f. [from govern.]
1. Government; rule; management.
Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas.
2. Control, as that of a guardian.
Me he knew not, neither his own ill,
'Till through wife handling, and fair governance,
I him recured to a better will.
What! shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Go'ster's governance?
3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.

GOV

- GOVERNANTE. n. f. [gouvernante, French.] A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.
- GOVERNESS. n. f. [gouvernresse, old French, from govern.] A female invested with authority.
1. A female invested with authority.
The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, wathes all the air,
That rheumatick distempers do abound. Shakespeare.
 2. A tutress; a woman that has the care of young ladies.
He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Dannaë is painted, when the suddenly saw the golden shower. Sidon.
His three younger children were taken from the governess in whose hands he put them. Clarendon, b. viii.
 3. A tutress; an instructress; a directress.
Great affliction that severe governess of the life of man brings upon those souls she seizes on. More against Atheism.
- GOVERNMENT. n. f. [gouvernement, French.]
1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.
There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many. Temple.
 2. An establishment of legal authority.
There they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd. Milton.
While he survives, in concord and content
The commons live, by no divisions rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government. Dryd.
Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power. Addison.
Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one. Swift.
 3. Administration of publick affairs.
Safety and equal government are things
Which subjects make as happy as their kings. Waller.
 4. Regularity of behaviour.
You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage, blood,
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion and disdain. Shakef. Hen. IV.
'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable. Shakef. H. VI.
 5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.
Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death. Shakef.
 6. Management of the limbs or body. Obsolete.
Their god
Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I them ward off with wary government. Fairy Queen.
 7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.
- GOVERNOUR. n. f. [gouverneur, French.]
1. One who has the supreme direction.
It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governour of the world by providence, all are partakers. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.
They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise. Bentley.
 2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.
For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations. Pf. xxii. 28.
The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion. South's Sermons.
 3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.
To you, lord governour,
Remains the censure of this hellish villain. Shakef. Othello.
 4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.
To Elton will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governour;
And for his safety there I'll best devise. Shakef. Henry VI.
The great work of a governour is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.
 5. Pilot; regulator; manager.
Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and

GOW

- are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governour listeth. Job. iii. 4.
- GOUGE. n. f. [French.] A chisel having a round edge, for the cutting such wood as is to be rounded or hollowed. Moxon.
- GOUGERES. n. f. [from gouje, French, a camp trull.] The French dicalc.
- GOURD. n. f. [gourde, French.]
1. It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, of the expanded bell-shape, for the most part deeply cut that it seems to consist of five distinct leaves: this, like the cucumber, has male and female flowers on the same plant. The fruit of some species are long, of others round, or bottle-shaped, and is commonly divided into six cells, in which are contained many flat oblong seeds. Miller.
But I will haste, and from each bough and brake,
Each plant, and juiciest gourd, will pluck such choice
To entertain our angel-guest. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
Gourd seeds are used in medicine; and they abound so much in oil, that a sweet and pleasant one may be drawn from them by expression: they are of the number of the four greater cold seeds, and are used in emulsions. Hill's Mat. Med.
 2. A bottle [from gour, old French. Skinner.]
The large fruit so called is often scooped hollow, for the purpose of containing and carrying wine, and other liquors: from thence any leathern bottle grew to be called by the same name, and so the word is used by Chaucer. Hammer.
- GOULDINESS. n. f. [from gourd.] A swelling in a horse's leg after a journey. Farrier's Dict.
- GOURNET. n. f. A fish. Ainsworth.
- GOUT. n. f. [goutte, French.]
1. The arthritis; a periodical disease attended with great pain.
The gout is a disease which may affect any membranous part, but commonly those which are at the greatest distance from the heart or the brain, where the motion of the fluids is the slowest, the resistance, friction, and stricture of the solid parts the greatest, and the sensation of pain, by the dilaceration of the nervous fibres, extreme. Arbutnot on Diet.
One that's sick o' th' gout, had rather Groan so in perplexity than be cur'd
By th' sure physician death. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
This very reverend lecher, quite worn out
With rheumatism, and crippled with his gout,
Forgets what he in youthful times has done,
And swings his own vices in his son. Dryden's Farnal.
 2. A drop, [goutte, French; gutta, Latin.] Gut for drop is still used in Scotland by physicians.

- To GRA'BBLE. v. n. [probably corrupted from grapple.] To grope; to feel eagerly with the hands.
My blood chills about my heart at the thought of these rogues, with their bloody hands grabbing in my guts, and pulling out my very entrails. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
- To GRA'BBLE. v. a. To lie prostrate on the ground. Ainsworth.
- GRACE. n. f. [grace, French; gratia, Latin; gracia, Erse.]
1. Favour; kindness.
If the highest love in no base person may aspire to grace, then may I hope your beauty will not be without pity. Sidney.
O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God! Shakef.
Such as were popular, Daniel.
And well deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.
Is this the reward and thanks I am to have for those many acts of grace I have lately pass'd? King Charles.
Yet those remov'd,
Such grace shall one just man find in his sight,
That he relents, not to blot out mankind. Milt. Par. Lost.
Noble pity held
His hand a while, and to their choice gave space
Which they would prove, his valour or his grace. Waller.
Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace;
Then either of you knights may well deserve
A prince's born. Dryden's Fables.
None of us, who now your grace implore,
But held the rank of sovereign queen before. Dryden.
With profer'd service I repaid the fair,
That of her grace she gave her maid to know
The secret meaning of this moral show. Dryden.
 2. Favourable influence of God on the human mind.
Preventive grace descending had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh
Regenerate grow instead. Milton.
The grace of God, that passeth understanding, keep your hearts and minds. Common Prayer.
 3. Virtue; effect of God's influence.
How Van wand'ers, who never wanted wit. Pope.

1. Regular progress from one degree to another.
The desire of more and more rises by a natural gradation to most, and after that to all. L'Estrange.
2. Regular advance step by step.
From thence,
By cold gradation, and well balance'd form,
We shall proceed with Angelo. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
The psalmist very elegantly expresseth to us the several gradations by which men at last come to this horrid degree of impiety. Tillotson, Sermon 2.
3. Order; arrangement.
'Tis the curle of service;
Preferment goes by letter and affection,
Not, as of old, gradation, where each second Stood heir to th' first. Shakespeare's Othello.
4. Regular process of argument.
Certain it is, by a direct gradation of consequences from this principle of merit, that the obligation to gratitude flows from, and is enjoined by, the first dictates of nature. South.
GRADATORY. n. f. [from gradus, Latin.] Steps from the cloisters into the church. Answorth.
GRADIENT. adj. [from gradient, Latin.] Walking; moving by steps.
Amongst those gradient automata, that iron spider is especially remarkable, which, being but of an ordinary bigness, did creep up and down as if it had been alive. Wilkins.
GRADUAL. adj. [from gradual, French.] Proceeding by degrees;
advancing step by step, from one stage to another.

GRA

Nobler birth
Of creatures animate with gradual life,
Of growth, sense, reason, all summ'd up in man. Milton.
Men still suppose a gradual natural progress of things; as that, from great, things and persons should grow greater, till at length, by many steps and ascents, they come to be at greatest. South.
GRADUAL. n. f. [from gradus, Latin.] An order of steps.
Before the gradual prostrate they ador'd,
The pavement kiss'd, and thus the faint implor'd. Dryden.
GRADUALITY. n. f. [from gradual.] Regular progression.
This some ascribe unto the mixture of the elements, others to the graduality of opacity and light. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
GRADUALLY. adv. [from gradual.] By degrees; in regular progression.
When the moon passes over the fixed stars, and eclipses them, your light vanishes; not gradually, like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton's Opt.
The Author of our being weans us gradually from our fondness of life the nearer we approach towards the end of it. Swift.
Human creatures are able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Arbutnot.
To GRADUATE. v. a. [from gradu, French; gradus, Latin.]
1. To dignify with a degree in the university.
John Tregonwel, graduated a doctor and dubbed a knight, did his prince good service. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Concerning columns and their adjuncts, architects make such a noise as if the terms of architraves, frizes, and cornices were enough to graduate a master of this art. Watson's Architect.
2. To mark with degrees.
The places were marked where the spirits stood at the severest cold and greatest heat, and according to these observations he graduates his thermometers. Derham's Physico-Theology.
3. To raise to a higher place in the scale of metals: a chemical term.
The tincture was capable to transmute or graduate as much silver as equalled in weight that gold. Bogly.
4. To heighten; to improve.
Not only vitriol is a cause of blackness, but the salts of natural bodies; and dyers advance and graduate their colours with salts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 12.
GRADUATE. n. f. [from gradu, French, from gradus, Latin.] A man dignified with an academical degree.
Of graduates I dislike the learned rout,
And chuse a female doctor for the gout. Branham.
GRADUATION. n. f. [from gradation, French, from graduate.]
1. Regular progression by succession of degrees.
The gradation of the parts of the universe is likewise necessary to the perfection of the whole. Grew's Cosmol. Sacra.
Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its gradation, that heated in fire, and often extinguished in oil of mars or iron, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fastened in a wall. Brown's Va. Err.
2. The act of conferring academical degrees.
GRAFF. n. f. [See GRAVE.] A ditch; a moat.
Though the fortifications were not regular, yet the walls were good, and the graff broad and deep. Clarendon, b. viii.
GRAFF. n. f. [from graff, French.] A small branch inserted into GRAFT. } the stock of another tree, and nourished by its sap, but bearing its own fruit; a young cyon.
God gave unto man all kind of seeds and graffs of life; as the vegetative life of plants, the sensual of beasts, the rational of man, and the intellectual of angels. Raleigh.
It is likely, that as in fruit-trees the graff maketh a greater fruit, so in trees that bear no fruit it will make the greater leaves. Bacon's Natural History, N. 475.
'Tis usual now an inmate graff to see
With insolence invade a foreign tree. Dryd. Virg. Georg.
If you cover the top with clay and horse-dung, in the same manner as you do a graff, it will help to heel the sooner. Mort.
Now the cleft rind inserted graffs receives,
And yields an offspring more than nature gives. Pope.
To GRAFF. } v. a. [from graffer, French.]
To GRAFT. }
1. To insert a cyon or branch of one tree into the stock of another.
His growth is but a wild and fruitless plant;
I'll cut his barren branches to the stock,
And graft you on to bear. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
With his pruning hook d'sjoin
Unbearing branches from their head,
And graft more happy in their stead. Dryden.
2. To propagate by insertion or inoculation.
In March is good grafting the skillful do know,
So long as the wind in the East do not blow:
From moon being changed, 'till past be the prime,
For grafting and cropping is very good time. Tusser's Husb.
To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graft, not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit: whereas, if you graft but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few. Bacon.
Now

GRA

Now let me graft my pears, and prune the vine. Dryden.
3. To insert into a place or body to which it did not originally belong.
And they also, if they bide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in; for God is able to graft them in again. Rom. xi. 23.
These are th' Italian names which fate will join
With ours, and graft upon the Trojan line. Dryden's Æn.
4. To fill with an adjectitious branch.
We've some old crab-trees here at home, that will not Be grafted to your relief. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The noble life doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shakespeare, R. III.
5. To join one thing so as to receive support from another.
This resolution against any peace with Spain is a new incident grafted upon the original quarrel, by the intrigues of a faction among us. Swift.
May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graft my love immortal on thy fame. Pope.
GRAFTER. n. f. [from graff or graft.] One who propagates fruit by grafting.
I am informed, by the trials of more than one of the most skillful and experienced graffers of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which the infusion is made. Evelyn.
GRAIL. n. f. [from grail, French.] Small particles of any kind.
Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was,
And, lying down upon the sandy grails,
Drank of the stream as clear as crystal glass. Fairy Queen.
GRAIN. n. f. [from graine, French; granum, Latin; grano, Italian, has all the following significations.]
1. A single seed of corn.
Look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow, and which will not. Shakespeare.
His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flogging, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shak. Coriolanus.
Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Corn.
As it ebbs, the feedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,
Nor Phœbus fed his oxen on the plain. Dryden's Pastoral.
'Tis a rich soil, I grant you; but oftner covered with weeds than grain. Collier on Fame.
3. The seed of any fruit.
4. Any minute particle; any single body.
Thou exist'st on many thousand grains
That issue out of dust. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
By intelligence
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
5. The smallest weight, of which in physics twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a penny weight; a grain is named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.
They began at a known body, a barley-corn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which ariseth, being multiplied, to scruples, drachms, ounces and pounds. Holder.
The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air; the balance in the water weigheth only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abateth of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains:
the balance kept the same depth in the water as above said.
Bacon's Phys. Rem.
His brain
Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain. Hudibras, p. i.
6. Any thing proverbially small.
For the whole world before thee is as a little grain of the balance. Wisd. xi. 22.
The ungrateful person lives to himself, and subsists by the good nature of others, of which he himself has not the least grain. South's Sermons.
7. GRAIN of Alluvance. Something indulged or remitted; something above or under the exact weight.
He, whose very best actions must be seen with grains of al-luvance, cannot be too mild, moderate, and forgiving. Addis.
I would always give some grains of alluvance to the sacred science of theology. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
8. The direction of the fibres of wood, or other fibrous matter.
Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the found pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shakespeare.
9. The body of the wood.
The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
Hard box, and linden of a softer grain. Dryden.

GRA

10. The body considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles.
The tooth of a sea-horse, in the midst of the solid parts, contains a curdled grain which is not to be found in ivory.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 23.
Stones of a constitution so compact, and a grain so fine, that they bear a fine polish. Woodward.
11. Died or stained substance.
How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,
Like crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser's Prothalam.
Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd,
Livelier than melibæan, or the grain
Of farra, worn by kings and heroes old. Milton's P. Lost.
Come, penfive nun, devout and pure,
All in a robe of darkest grain,
Flowing with majestic train. Milton.
The third, his feet
Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail,
Sky-tinctur'd grain! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour.
Your minds, preoccupied with what
You rather must do than what you should do,
Made you against the grain to voice him conful. Shakespeare.
Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,
I see, to argue 'gainst the grain. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 2.
Old clients, weary'd out with fruitless care,
Dismiss their hopes of eating, and despair;
Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,
Buy roots for supper, and provide a fire. Dryden's Juvenal.
13. The heart; the bottom.
The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain. Hayward.
14. The form of the surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.
The smaller the particles of those substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton's Opt.
GRAINED. adj. [from grain.] Rough; made less smooth.
Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap consuming Winter's drizzled snow,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakespeare.
GRAINS. n. f. [without a singular.] The husks of malt exhausted in brewing.
Give them grains their fill,
Husks, draft, to drink and swill. Ben. Jonson's New Inn.
GRAIN. adj. [from grain.]
1. Full of corn.
2. Full of grains or kernels.
GRAMERCY. interj. [contracted from grant me mercy.] An obsolete expression of surprise.
Gramercy, sir, said he; but mote I weat
What strange adventure do ye now pursue? Fairy Queen.
Gramercy, lovely Lucius, what's the news? Shakespeare.
GRAMINEOUS. adj. [from gramineus, Latin.] Grassy. Grami-neous plants are such as have a long leaf without a footstalk.
GRAMINIVOROUS. adj. [from gramen and voro, Latin.] Gras-eating; living upon grass.
The ancients were veried chiefly in the dissection of brutes, among which the graminivorous kind have a party-coloured choroides. Sharp's Surgery.
GRAMMAR. n. f. [from grammaire, French; grammatica, Latin;
γραμματική.]
1. The science of speaking correctly; the art which teaches the relations of words to each other.
We make a countryman dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden's Duressnoy.
Men, speaking language according to the grammar rules of that language, do yet speak improperly of things. Locke.
2. Propriety or justness of speech; speech according to grammar.
Varium & mutabile semper femina, is the sharpest satire that ever was made on woman; for the adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make them grammar. Dryden.
3. The book that treats of the various relations of words to one another.
GRAMMAR School. n. f. A school in which the learned languages are grammatically taught.
Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.
The ordinary way of learning Latin in a grammar school I cannot encourage. Locke.
GRAMMARIAN. n. f. [from grammairien, French, from grammar.]
One who teaches grammar; a philologist.

GRA

Many disputes the ambiguous nature of letters hath created among the grammarians. Holder's Elements of Speech.

They who have called him the torture of grammarians, might also have called him the plague of translators. Dryden.
GRAMMATICAL. adj. [grammatical, Fr. grammaticus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to grammar.
The beauty of virtue still being set before their eyes, and that taught them with far more diligent care than grammatical rules. Sidne, b. ii.

I shall take the number of consonants, not from the grammatical alphabets of any language, but from the diversity of sounds framed by single articulations with appulse. Holder.

2. Taught by grammar.
They seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless born with a poetical genius. Dryden's Duffesney.

GRAMMATICALLY. adv. [from grammatical.] According to the rules or science of grammar.

When a sentence is distinguished into the nouns, the verbs, pronouns, adverbs, and other particles of speech which compose it, then it is said to be analysed grammatically. Watts.

As grammar teacheth us to speak properly, so it is the part of rhetoric to instruct how to do it elegantly, by adding beauty to that language that before was naked and grammatically true. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

GRAMMATICASTER. n. f. [Latin.] A mean verbal pedant; a low grammarian.

I have not vexed their language with the doubts, the remarks, and eternal triflings of the French grammaticasters. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

GRAMPLE. n. f. A crab-fish.

GRAMPUS. n. f. A large fish of the cetaceous kind.

GRANARY. n. f. [granarium, Latin.] A storehouse for threshed corn.

Ants, by their labour and industry, contrive the matter so, that corn will keep as dry in their nests as in our granaries. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 156.

The naked nations cloath,

And be th' exhaustless granary of a world. Thomson's Spring.
GRANATE. n. f. [from granum, Latin.] A kind of marble so called, because it is marked with small variegations like grains. Otherwise GRANITE.

GRAND. adj. [grand, French; grandis, Latin.]

1. Great; illustrious; high in power.
God had planted, that is, made to grow the trees of life and knowledge, plants only proper and becoming the paradise and garden of so grand a Lord. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

2. Great; splendid; magnificent.
A voice has flown

To re-entame a grand design. Yang.

3. Noble; sublime; lofty; conceived or expressed with great dignity.

4. It is used to signify ascent or descent of consanguinity.

GRANDAM. n. f. [grand and dam or dame.]

1. Grandmother; my father's or mother's mother.

I meeting him, will tell him that my lady

Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste

As may be in the world. Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.

A woman's story, at a Winter's fire,

Authoris'd by her grandam. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

We have our forefathers and great grandames all before us, as they were in Chaucer's days. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

Thy tygers heart belies thy angel face:

Too well thou shew'st thy pedigree from stone;

Thy grandame's was the first by Pyrrha thrown. Dryden.

2. An old withered woman.

The women

Cry'd, one and all, the suppliant should have right,

And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight. Dryden.

GRANDCHILD. n. f. [grand and child.] The son or daughter of my son or daughter; one in the second degree of descent.

Augustus Caesar, out of indignation against his daughters and Agrippa his grandchild, would say that they were not his seed, but imposthumes broken from him. Bacon's Apophthegms.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so

May great grandchildren of thy praises grow. Donne.

He hoped his majesty did believe, that he would never make the least scruple to obey the grandchild of king James. Corend.

Fair daughter, and thou son and grandchild both! Milton.

He 'scaping with his gods and reliques fled,

And tow'rs the shore his little grandchild led. Denham.

GRANDDAUGHTER. n. f. [grand and daughter.] The daughter of a son or daughter.

GRANDEE. n. f. [grand, French; grandis, Latin.] A man of great rank, power, or dignity.

They had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an interview of grantees, both vehement on the parts which they sway'd. Wotton.

When a prince or grandee manifests a liking to such a thing, men generally set about to make themselves considerable for such things. Scott's Sermons.

Some parts of the Spanish monarchy are rather for ornament than strength: they furnish out viceroys for the grantees, and pots of honour for the noble families. Addison.

GRANDEVITY. n. f. [from grandævus, Latin.] Great age; length of life. Di.

GRANDEVIOUS. adj. [grandævus, Latin.] Long lived; of great age. Di.

GRANDEUR. n. f. [French.]

1. State; splendour of appearance; magnificence.

As a magistrate or great officer, he locks himself from all approaches by the multiplied formalities of attendance, by the distance of ceremony and grandeur. South's Sermons.

2. Elevation of sentiment or language.

GRANDFATHER. n. f. [grand and father.] The father of my father or mother; the next above my father in the scale of ascent.

One was saying that his great grandfather, and grandfather, and father died at sea: said another, that heard him, an' I were as you, I would never come at sea. Why, faith he, where did your great grandfather, and grandfather, and father die? He answered, where but in their beds? He answered, an' I were as you, I would never come in bed. Bacon's Apophth.

Our grandchild will see a few rags hung up in Westminsterhall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boast that their grandfathers were rich and great. Swift.

GRANDFICK. adj. [grandis and facio, Latin.] Making great. Di.

GRANDINOUS. adj. [grandis, Latin.] Full of hail; consisting of hail. Di.

GRANDITY. n. f. [from grandis, Latin.] Greatness; grandeur; magnificence. An old word.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness. Camden's Remains.

GRANDMOTHER. n. f. [grand and mother.] The father's or mother's mother.

Thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice. 1 Tim. i. 5.

GRANDSIRE. n. f. [grand and fire.]

1. Grandfather.

Think't thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandsire and my father sat? Shakspeare's Hen. VI.

Thy grandsire, and his brother, to whom fame

Gave, from two conquer'd parts o' th' world, their name. Denham.

The wreaths his grandsire knew to reap

By active toil and military sweat. Prior.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,

Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster? Shakspeare's Merch. of Ven.

Above the portal, carv'd in cedar wood,

So mimic ancient wits at best,

As apes our grandsires in their doublets dress. Pope.

GRANDSON. n. f. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy store,

Give much to you, and to his grandsons more. Dryden.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes. Swift.

GRANGE. n. f. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, faith he; the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. Ben. Johnson's Discourse.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shakspeare.

The loose unletter'd hinds,

When for their teeming flocks and granges full

In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate: and of this sort were their granges and priories. Ayliffe.

GRANITE. n. f. [granit, Fr. from granum, Lat. because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together, of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moor-stone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall and the adjacent counties it is found on the surface of the earth in prodigious masses, and brought in great quantities to London, where it is used for the steps of public buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish. It is common in Egypt and Arabia, and and is also found in the West of England little inferior. The vulgar opinion of their being call out of various fragments of marble, because they appear composed of particles or granules of different colours, is easily confuted by an accurate inspection of the structure and formation of those granules, the least and meanest of which no human art could ever compose, nor fire leave in the state in which we see them. A third sort of granite has a beautiful variegation of colours, red, white, black and yellow, and capable of an elegant polish: it is little inferior in beauty to the oriental granite, and there are immense strata of it in Minorca. Detached nodules of it, two or three foot in circumference, are also frequent on the shores of Guernsey, from whence it is brought as ballast, and used in paving our streets. Hill on Fossils.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite. Woodward.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Addison on Italy.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bills, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without mastication. Brown.

Panick affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind. Abulnash on Animals.

GRANNAM. n. f. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only used in burlesque works.

Of my kind grannam told me, Tim, take warning. Cay.

To GRAN. v. a. [from granit, French, Junius and Skinner; perhaps, as Mishew thinks, from gratuito, or rather from gratia or gratificor.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant, that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church. Hooker.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree,

The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire

A moment elder than my rival fire,

Can chance of seeing first thy title prove? Dryden.

If he be one indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man. Addison's Freeholder.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him. 1 Sa. xvii.

Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. Acts xiii. 18.

Did'st thou not kill this king?

—I grant ye.

—Do'st grant me, hedgehog? Then God grant me too,

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed. Shakspeare's R. III.

He heard, and granted half his prayer;

The rest the winds dispers'd. Pope.

GRANT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.

Courteers justify for a grant,

And when they break their friendship plead their want. Dry.

3. [In law.] A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politic; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth it is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed. Cowel.

All the whole land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shewed from her majesty. Spenser's State of Ireland.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage. Hooker, b. iii. f. 11.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before. Dryden.

GRANTABLE. adj. [from grant.] That which may be granted.

The office of the bishop's chancellor was grantable for life. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRANTEE. n. f. [from grant.] He to whom any grant is made.

To smooth the way for popery in Mary's time, the grantees were confirmed by the pope in the possession of the abbeylands. Swift.

GRANTOR. n. f. [from grant.] He by whom a grant is made.

A duplex querela shall not be granted under pain of suspension of the grantor from the execution of his office. Ayliffe.

GRANULARY. adj. [from granule.] Small and compact; resembling a small grain or seed.

Small-coal, with sulphur and nitre, proportionably mixed, tempered, and formed into granular bodies, do make up that powder which is in use for guns. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To GRANULATE. v. n. [granuler, Fr. from granum, Latin.] To be formed into small grains.

The juice of grapes, inspissated by heat, granulates into sugar. Spratt.

To GRA'NULATE. v. a.

1. To break into small masses or granules.

2. To raise into small asperities.

I have observed, in many birds, the gullet, before its entrance into the gizzard, to be much dilated, and thick set, or as it were granulated with a multitude of glandules, each whereof was provided with its excretory vessel. Roy.

GRANULATION. n. f. [granulation, French, from granulate.]

1. The act of pouring melted metal into cold water, so as it may granulate or congeal into small grains: it is generally done through a colander, or a birchen broom. Gunpowder and some salts are likewise said to be granulated, from their resemblance to grain or seed. Quincy.

2. The act of shooting or breaking in small masses.

Tents in wounds, by resisting the growth of the little granulation of the flesh, in process of time harden them, and in that manner produce a fistula. Sharp's Surgery.

GRA'NULE. n. f. [from granum, Latin.] A small compact particle.

With an excellent microscope, where the naked eye did see but a green powder, the assisted eye could discern particular granules, some blue, and some yellow. Boyle on Colours.

GRA'NULOUS. adj. [from granule.] Full of little grains.

GRAPE. n. f. [grappe, French; krappe, Dutch.] The fruit of the vine, growing in clusters; the fruit from which wine is expressed.

And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.

Turn back thine hand, as the grape gatherers into the baskets. Jer. vi. 9.

Anacreon, for thy sake

I of the grape no mention make;

Ere my Anacreon by thee fell,

Curst plant I lov'd thee well. Cowley.

Here are the vines in early flow'r discri'd,

Here grapes discolour'd on the sunny side. Pope's Odyssey.

GRAPE Hyacinth, or GRAPE Flower. See MUSK.

GRAPESTONE. n. f. [grape and stone.] The stone or seed contained in the grape.

When obedient nature knows his will,

A fly, a grasshopper, or a hair can kill. Prior.

GRAPHICAL. adj. [γραφικα.] Well delineated.

Write with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young; for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical. Bacon's Natural History.

GRAPHICALLY. adv. [from graphical.] In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation.

The hyena odorata, or civet cat, is delivered and graphically described by Castellus. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

GRA'PNEL. n. f. [grapin, French.]

2. A grappling iron with which in fight one ship fastens on another.

To GRAPPLE. v. n. [grabbelen, Dutch; krappeln, German.]

1. To contend by seizing each other, as wrestlers.

They must be also practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugg or grapple, and to close. Milton.

Living virtue, all achievements pass,

Meets envy, still to grapple with at last. Waller.

Does he think that he can grapple with divine vengeance, and endure the everlasting burnings? South's Sermons.

Antæus here and stern Alcides strive,

And both the grappling statues seem to live. Addison.

2. To contend in close fight.

I'll in my standard bear the arms of York,

To grapple with the house of Lancaster. Shakspeare's Hen. VI.

Sometimes, from fighting squadrons of each fleet,

Two grappling Ætnas on the ocean meet,

And English fires with Belgian flames contend. Dryden.

To GRA'PPLE. v. a.

1. To fasten; to fix; to join indissolubly. Now obsolete.

Grapple your minds to sternage of the navy,

And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shakspeare's H. V.

I will put that business in your bosoms,

Whose execution takes your enemy off,

Grapples you to the heart and love of us. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

2. To seize; to lay fast hold of.

GRA'PPLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Contest hand to hand, in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestlers hold.

As when earth's son, Antæus, strove

With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose

Fresh

GRA

Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd, Throttled at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.
Or did his genius
Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To skulk behind my sword. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. Close fight.
In the grapple I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner. Shakef. Hamlet.
3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.
But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd. Dryden.
GRA'PPLEMENT. n. f. [from grapple.] Close fight; hostile embrace.
They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overthrew, and down him stay'd
With their rude hands and grievous grapplement. Fairy Queen.
GRA'SHOPPER. n. f. [from grasp and hop.] A small insect that hops in the summer grass. The cicada of the Latins, or cicala of the Italians, is often by the poets translated grashopper, but improperly.
Her wagon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The cover of the wings of grashoppers. Shakef. Ro. and Jul.
Grashoppers eat up the green of whole countries. Bacon.
Where silver lakes, with verdant shadows crown'd,
Disperse a grateful chinefs all around;
The grashopper avoids the untainted air,
Nor in the midst of summer ventures there. Addison.
The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grashoppers before them. Addison's Spectator.
GRA'SPER. See GRAZIER.
To GRASP. v. a. [from grasp, Italian.]

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.
2. To struggle; to strive; to grapple. Not now in use.
See, his face is black and full of blood;
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasps
And tugg'd for life. Shakefpeare's Henry VI. p. ii.
3. To gripe; to encroach.
Like a miser 'midst his store,
Who grasps and grasps till he can hold no more. Dryden.
GRASP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The gripe or seizure of the hand.
Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both spear and shield. Milton's Paradise Lost.
This hand and sword have been acquainted well;
It should have come before into my grasp.
To kill the ravisher. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
The left arm is a little defaced, though one may see it held something in its grasp formerly. Addison on Italy.
2. Possession; hold.
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp.
And the rich East to boot. Shakefpeare's Macbeth.
3. Power of seizing.
Within the direful grasp
Of savage hunger, or of savage heat.
They looked upon it as their own, and had it even within their grasp. Clarendon, b. viii.
GRA'SPER. n. f. [from grasp.] One that grasps, seizes, or catches at.
GRASS. n. f. [from grasp, Saxon.] The common herbage of the field on which cattle feed; an herb with long narrow leaves.
Ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bells. Jer. l. ii.
The trade of beef for foreign exportation was prejudiced, and almost sunk; for the flesh being young, and only grasped, was thin, light and moist, and not of a substance to endure the salt, or be preserved by it, for long voyages, or a slow consumption. Temple.
You'll be no more your former you;
But for a blooming nymph will pass,
Just fifteen, coming summer's grass. Swift.
GRASS of Parnassus. n. f. [from parnassia, Latin.]

GRA

It hath a rose-shaped flower of five large leaves, and five small at the bottom fringed, of a greenish colour, and planted orbicularly: out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, which turns to an oval membranaceous fruit, having but one cell filled with seeds. This plant grows wild in moist meadows, particularly in the North. It is called parnassia from mount Parnassus, where it was supposed to grow; and because the cattle feed on it, it obtained the name of grass, though the plant has no resemblance to the grass kind. Miller.
To GRASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed grass; to become pasture.
Land arable, driven, or worn to the proof,
With oats ye may sow it, the sooner to grass,
More soon to be pasture, to bring it to pass. Tull. Husband.
GRASS-PLOT. n. f. [from grass and plot.] A small level covered with short grass.
Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
Come and sport. Shakefpeare's Tempest.

grass.
GRA'SSY. adj. [from grass.] Covered with grass; abounding with grass.
Ne did he leave the mountains bare unseen,
Nor the rank grassy fens delights untry'd. Spenser.
Rais'd of grassy turf
Their table was, and mossy seats had round. Milt. P. Lost.
The most in fields, like herded beasts, lie down,
To dews obnoxious, on the grassy floor. Dryd. Ann. Mir.
GRATE. n. f. [from grate, Latin.]
1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other: such as are in cloysters or prisons.
I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch-fellow, Nim; or else you had look'd through the grates, like a gemmy of baboons. Shakefpeare.
Out at a little grate his eyes he cast
Upon those bordering hills, and open plain. Daniel's C. W.
A fan has on it a nursery of lively black-eyed vetches, who are endeavouring to creep out at the grates. Addison.
2. The range of bars within which fires are made.
My dear is of opinion that an old fashioned grate consumes coals, but gives no heat. Spectator, No. 30.
To GRATE. v. a. [from grate, French.]
1. To rub or wear any thing by the attrition of a rough body.
Thereat the fiend his gnashing teeth did grate. Fai. Qu.
Blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakefpeare's Troilus and Cressida.
If the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton's Opt.
2. To offend by any thing harsh or vexatious.
Thereat enraged, soon he 'gan upstart,
Grinding his teeth and grating his great heart. Hubb. Tab.
They have been partial in the gospel, culled and chosen out those softer and more gentle dictates which should less grate and disturb them. Decay of Piety.
Just resentment and hard usage coin'd
Th' unwilling word; and, grating as it is,
Take it, for it is thy due. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
This habit of writing and discouraging, wherein I unfortunately differ from almost the whole kingdom, and am apt to grate the ears of more than I could wish, was acquired during my apprenticeship in London. Swift.
3. To form a sound by collision of asperities or hard bodies.
The grating shock of wrathful iron arms. Shakef. R. II.
On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook
Of Erebus. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
To GRATE. v. n.
1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend; to offend, as by oppression or importunity.
Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should feel this lawless bloody book
Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine? Shakef. Henry IV.
I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, or else you had looked through the grates. Shakefpeare.
Paradoxing is of great use; but the faculty must be so tenderly managed as not to grate upon the truth and reason of things. L'Estrange's Fables.
This grated harder upon, and raised greater tumults and boilings in the hearts of men, than the seeming unreasonableness of former articles. South's Sermons.
I never

GRA

I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have filled their lives with discontent. Lake.
2. To make a harsh noise, as that of a rough body drawn over another.
We are not so nice as to cast away a sharp knife, because the edge of it may sometimes grate. Hesler, b. v. f. 36.
GRA'TEFUL. adj. [from gratus, Latin.]
1. Having a due sense of benefits; willing to acknowledge and to repay benefits.
A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays.
Years of service past,
From grateful souls exact reward at last. Dryden's Fables.
2. Pleading; acceptable; delightful; delicious.
Whatever is ingrate at first, is made grateful by custom;
but whatsoever is too pleasing at first, groweth quickly to satiate. Bacon's Natural History.
Now golden fruits on loaded branches shine,
And grateful clusters swell with floods of wine. Pope.
GRA'TEFULLY. adv. [from grateful.]
1. With willingness to acknowledge and repay benefits; with due sense of obligation.
He, as new wak'd, thus gratefully reply'd. Milton.

aversions, and to renounce those gratifications in which he has been long used to place his happiness? Rogers's Sermons.
3. Reward; recompence. A low word.
To GRATIFY. v. a. [from gratificatio, Latin.]
1. To indulge; to please by compliance.
You treat between the country and the court,
Nor gratify, what's at the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require. Dryden.
2. To delight; to please.
But pride stood ready to prevent the blow;
For who would die to gratify a foe? Dryden's Fables.
The captive generals to his car are ty'd;
The joyful citizens tumultuous tide
Echoing his glory, gratify his pride. Prior.
A palid appetite is humorous, and must be gratified with saucers rather than food. Taiter, No. 54.
At once they gratify their scent and taste,
While frequent cups prolong the rich repast. Pope.
A thousand little impertinencies are very gratifying to curiosity, though not improving to the understanding. Addison.

declination of atoms, the same poet gives us. Ray.
GRATUITOUSLY. adv. [from gratuitous.]
1. Without claim or merit.
2. Without proof.
I would know whence came this obliquity of direction, which they gratuitously tack to matter: this is to ascribe will and choice to these particles. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
GRATUITY. n. f. [from gratuité, Fr. from gratuitous.] A present or acknowledgment; a free gift.
They might have pretended to comply with Ulysses, and dismissed him with a small gratuity. Notes on the Odyssey.
He used every year to present us with his almanack, upon the score of some little gratuity we gave him. Swift.
To GRA'TULATE. v. a. [from gratulari, Latin.]
1. To congratulate; to salute with declarations of joy.
To gratify the good Andronicus,
And grate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admires. Shakef. Tit. Andr.
Whither away so fast?
—No farther than the Tower,
To grate the gentle princes there. Shakef. Rich. III.
Since nature could behold so dire a crime,
I grate at least my native clime,
That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore. Dryden's Fables.
2. To declare joy for.
Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy scape from rumour grate,
No less than if from peril; and devout,
Do beg thy care unto thy after state. Ben. Jonson's Epigrams.
GRATULATION. n. f. [from gratularia, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.
They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him. Hook.
The earth
Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Milt. Par. Lost.
Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a Christian desire, are so complete that they require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their ful-ness, only wish their continuance. South.
GRA'TULATORY. adj. [from gratulate.] Congratulatory, expressing congratulation.
GRAVE, a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon græp, a grove or cave. Gibson's Camden.
GRAVE. n. f. [from græp, Saxon.] The place in the ground in which the dead are repositied.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spright,
In the church-way paths to glide. Shakefpeare.
Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave. Milton.
To walk upon the graves of our dead masters,
Is our own security.
A flood of waters would overwhelm all those fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave all mankind, and all the inhabitants of the earth. Burnet.
GRAVE-CLOATHS. n. f. [from grave and cloaths.] The dress of the dead.
But of such subtle substance and unbound,
That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-cloaths were unbound. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. xi.
And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-cloaths. Jo. xi. 44.
GRAVE-STONE. n. f. [from grave and stone.] The stone that is laid over the grave; the monumental stone.

Lie graveless. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

GRAVELLY. adj. [graveleux, French, from gravel.] Full of gravel; abounding with gravel; consisting of gravel.
There are some natural spring-waters that will inlaidate wood; so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under the water shall be turned into a gravelly stone. Bacon's N. Hist.
If you live in a consumptive air, make choice of the more open, high, dry, and gravelly part of it. Harvey on Consumption.

GRAVELY. adv. [from grave.]
1. Solemnly; seriously; soberly; without lightness or mirth.
Thou stand'st
Gravely in doubt when to hold them wife. Milton.
A girl longs to tell her confidant that she hopes to be married in a little time, and asks her very gravely what she would have her to do. Spektator, N. 475.
Widow's above suspecting wiles;
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.
A formal story was very gravely carried to his excellency, by some zealous members. Swift.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRAVENESS. n. f. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.
You no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than settled age his fables, and his weeds
Importing health and gravensess. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
But yet beware of counsels when too full;
Number makes long disputes and gravensess dull. Danlon.

GRAVELENT. adj. [graveleus, Lat.] Strong scented. Diis.

GRAVER. n. f. [graveur, French, from grave.]
1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impressed on paper.
If he makes a design to be graved, he is to remember that the graver disposes not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the reason of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has disposed to cause the effect. Dryden's Discrepancy.

2. The file or tool used in graving.
With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this. Boyle.
The toilsome hours in different labour slide,
Some work the file, and some the graver guide. Gay's Fan.

GRAVIDITY. n. f. [graviditas, Latin.] Pregnancy; state of being with child.
Women, obstructed, have not always the forementioned symptoms: in those the signs of gravidity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning. Arbutnot on Diet.

GRAVING. n. f. [from grave.] Carved work.
Skillful to work in gold; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chr. ii. 14.

To GRAVITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the center of attraction.
Those who have nature's steps with care purfue'd,
That matter is with active force endu'd,
That all its parts magnetic pow'r exert,
And to each other gravitate, assert. Blackmore's Creation.
That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITATION. n. f. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.
The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley's Sermons.
When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope's Ess. on Man.

GRAVITY. n. f. [gravitas, Latin; gravité, French.]
1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.
That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre of the earth, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unsolvable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and apparent, vulgar or comparative; absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.
Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 15.
Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton's Opt.

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.
No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hacker, b. i. f. 10.

3. Seriousness; solemnity.
There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. 1.
Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
For the advocates and council that plead, patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of justice. Bacon's Essay 57.
Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd. Dryden's En.
The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity. Addison.

GRA'VVY. n. f. The ferous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.
They usually boil and roast their meat until it falls almost off from the bones; but we love it half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey on Consumption.
There may be a stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GRAY. adj. [grey, Saxon; grau, Danish; grauw, Dutch.]
1. White with a mixture of black.
They left me then, when the gray headed even,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed.
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.
These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton's Opt.

2. White or hoary with old age.
Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grilly, and many others. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton's Life of Bishop Sanderson.

Anon
Gray headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd, Assemble. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glav. Steff.
Gray headed infant! and in vain grown old!
Art thou to learn that in another's gold Lie charms resistless? Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 13.
We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison's Spectator, N. 517.
Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,
And Bacon trembling for his brazen head. Pope's Dunciad.

To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

GRAYHOUND. See GREYHOUND.

GRAYLING. n. f. The umber, a fish.
The grayling lives in such rivers as the trout does, and is usually taken with the same baits, and after the same manner: he is of a fine shape, his flesh white, and his teeth, those little ones that he has, are in his throat. He is not so general a fish as the trout, nor so good to eat. Walton's Angler.

GRAYNESS. n. f. [from gray.] The quality of being gray.

To GRAZE. v. n. [from graze.]
1. To eat grass; to feed on grass.
The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck. Shakespeare's As you like it.
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me. Shak.
Leaving in the fields his grazing cows,
He fought himself some hospitable house. Dryden's Fables.

GRE

After break their fast
On greenward ground, a cool and grateful taste. Dryden.
In shallow soils all is gravel within a few inches; and sometimes in low ground a thin greenward, and sloughy underneath; which last turns all into bog. Swift.
GREENWEED. n. f. [green and weed.] Dyers weed.
GREENWOOD. n. f. [green and wood.] A wood considered as it appears in the Spring or Summer. It is sometimes used as one word.
Among wild herbs under the greenwood shade. Fairfax.
It happen'd on a Summer's holiday,
That to the greenwood shade he took his way;
For Cymon thunn'd the church. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.
To GREET. v. a. [grator, Latin; grecan, Saxon.]
1. To address at meeting.
I think if men, which in these places live,
Durst look in themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would like strangers greet themselves. Donne.
I would gladly go,
To greet my Pallas with such news below. Dryden's Æn.
2. To address in whatever manner.
My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great prediction;
To me you speak not. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good. Shakespeare's Richard II.
3. To salute in kindness or respect.
My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.
—God blest your grace with health and happy days. Shakesp.
Now the herald lark
Left his ground nest, high tow'ring to descry
The morn's approach, and greet her with his song. Milton.
Once had the early matrons run
To greet her of a lovely son. Milton.
The sea's our own; and now all nations greet,
With bending sails, each vessel of our fleet. Waller.
Thus pale they meet, their greeting will return;
None *greet*s; for none the greeting will return;
But in dumb furliness, each arm'd with care,
His foe profess, as brother of the war. Dryden's Fables.
4. To congratulate.
His lady, seeing all that channel from far,
Approach in haste to greet his victorie. Fairy Queen, b. i.
5. To pay compliments at a distance.
The king's a-bed,
And sent great largess to your officers;
This diamond he *greet*s your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostels. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
6. To meet, as those do who go to pay congratulations. Not much in use.
Your haste
Is now urg'd on you.
—We will greet the time. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Such was that face on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stem'd the tides to Troy;
But parting then for that detested shore,
Our eyes, unhappy! never greeted more. Pope's Odyssey.
To GREET. v. n. To meet and salute.
There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace. Shakesp.
GREET. n. f. [from the verb.] He who greets.
GREETING. n. f. [from greet.] Salutation at meeting, or compliments at a distance.
I from him
Give you all greetings, that a king, as friend,
Can send his brother. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
GREEZE. n. f. [Otherwise written greece. See GREECE, or GRIEZE, or GRICE, from degrees.] A flight of steps; a step.
In purity of manhood stand uprights,
And say, this man's a flatterer: if one be,
So are they all; for every greeze of fortune
Is smooch'd by that below: the learned pate,
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
GRE'GAL. adj. [gregis, Latin.] Belonging to a flock. DiG.
GRE'GARIOUS. adj. [gregarius, Latin.] Going in flocks or herds, like sheep or partridges.
No birds of prey are gregarious. Ray on the Creation.
GRE'GIAL. adj. [gregium, Lat.] Pertaining to the lap. DiG.
GRENADE. n. f. [from ponum granatum, Latin.] A little hollow globe or ball of iron, or other metal, about two inches and a half in diameter, which, being filled with fine powder, is set on fire by means of a small fusee fastened to the touch-hole: as soon as it is kindled, the case flies into many shatters, much to the damage of all that stand near. These grenades serve to fire close and narrow passages, and are often thrown with the hand among the soldiers to disorder their ranks, more especially in those posts where they stand thickest; as in trenches, redoubts, and lodgments. Harr.
GRE'NADIER. n. f. [grenadier, Fr. from grenade.] A tall foot-soldier, of whom there is one company in every regiment:

such men being employed to throw grenades.
Peace allays the shepherd's fear
Of wearing cap of grenadier. Gay's Pastoral.
GRENA'DO. n. f. See GRENADE.
Yet to express a Scot, to play that prize,
Not all those mouth grenades can suffice. Cleaveland.
You may as well try to quench a flaming grenade with a shell of fair water, as hope to succeed. Watts.
GREUT. n. f. A kind of fossil body.
A sort of tin-ore, with its greut; that is, a congeries of crystals, or sparks of spar, of the bigness of bayleaf, and of a brown shining colour immerfed therein. Grew's Museum.
GREW. The preterite of grow.
The pleasing talk he fails not to renew;
Soft and more soft at ev'ry touch it grew. Dryden's Fables.
GREY. adj. [gris, French. More properly written gray.] See GRAY.
This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I spar'd at suit of his grey beard.
Our green youth copies what grey finners act,
When venerable age commends the fact. Dryden.
GREYHOUND. n. f. [gruhund, Saxon.] A tall fleet dog that chafes in fight.
So on the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A half'ned hare from greedy greyhounds go.
Th' impatient greyhound, flit from far,
Bounds o'er the glebe to catch the fearful hare. Dryden.
GRICE. n. f.
1. A little pig. Gouldman.

No, not a grice;
This a step to love. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
To GRIDE. v. n. [gridare, Italian.] To cut; to make way by cutting. A word elegant, but not in use.
His poignant spear he thrust with puissant sway,
At proud Cymochles, whiles his shield was wide,
That through his thigh the mortal steel did gride. F. Quin.
So fore
The griding sword, with discontinuous wound,
Pass'd through him! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
GRIDELIN. adj. A colour mixed of white and red.
The ladies dress'd in rich fymars were seen,
Of Florence fatten, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin. Dryden's Fob.
GRIDIRON. n. f. [grind, Islandick, a grate and iron.] A portable grate on which meat is laid to be broiled upon the fire.
He had added two bars to the gridiron. Spektator, N° 570.
GRIEF. n. f. [from grieve; griff, Welsh, probably from the English.]
1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.
I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout. Shakespeare.
Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, or wailing one's self unborn, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. South's Sermon.
The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison's Spect.
2. Grievance; harm. [Grief, French.]
Be fadious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest. Shakespeare.
The king hath sent to know
The nature of your griefs, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility? Shakespeare's Henry IV, p. i.
3. Pain; dis ease.
GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief.]
1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.
2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.
What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity?
To GRIEVE. v. a. [greuer, French; griever, Flemish; grevius, Latin.] To afflict; to hurt.
For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Lu iii. 37.
It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen vi. 6.
Grieved at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour
Should be to close those breaches. Rowe's Ambitious Step.
To GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends.
Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world. Shak H. IV.
With

GRI

With equal mind what happens let us bear;
Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.
Dryden's Fables.
GRIE'VINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.
Grievingly, I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
GRIE'VOUS. adj. [gravis, Latin; or from To grieve.]
1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be born.
To the flesh, as the apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.
Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die. Prov xv. 10.
2. Such as causes sorrow.
To own a great but grievous truth, though they may quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness.
He durst not disobey, but sent grievous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to. Clarendon.
4. Atrocious; heavy.
It was a grievous fault,
And grievously hath Caesar answer'd it. Shakespeare's Jul. Caesar.
5. Sometimes used adverbially in low language.
He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick. Shakespeare.
GRIE'VOUSLY. adv. [from grievous.]
1. Painfully; with pain.
Wide was the wound, and a large lukewarm flood,
Red as the rose, thence gush'd grievously. Fairy Queen.
2. With discontent; with ill will.
Gritus, perceiving how grievously the matter was taken,
with the danger he was in, began to doubt. Kneller.
3. Calamitously; miserably.
I see how a number of souls are, for want of right information in this point, oftentimes grievously vexed. Hooker, b. v.
4. Vexatiously; to a great degree of uneasiness.
Houses built in plains are apt to be grievously annoyed with mire and dirt. Ray on the Creation.
GRIE'VOUSNESS. n. f. [from grievous.] Sorrow; pain; calamity.
They fled from the swords, from the drawn sword and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war. Is xxi. 15.
GRIFFIN. n. f. [This should rather be written gryphon, or gry-ffon.] phon, gryps, γρυψ; but it is generally written griffin.] A fabled animal, said to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.
Of all bearing among these winged creatures, the griffin is the most ancient. Peacocks on Blazoning.
Arifteen, a poet of Proconessus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold. Brown.
GRIG. n. f. [bricke, Bavarian, a little duck.]
1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.
2. A small eel.
3. A merry creature. [Supposed from Greek; graculus festivus,
Latin.]
Hard is her heart as flint or stone,
She laughs to see me pale;
And merry as a grig is grown,
And brisk as bottle-ale. Swift.
To GRILL. v. n. [grille, a grate, French.] To broil on a grate or gridiron.
GRILLADE. n. f. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.
To GRILLY. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harass; to hurt: as we now say, to roast a man, for to teaze him.
For while we wrangle here and jar,
We are grilled all at Temple-bar. Hudibras, p. iii.
GRIM. adj. [grymma, Saxon.]
1. Having a countenance of terror; horrible; hideous; frightful.
The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,
With change of fear to see the lion look so grim. F. Queen.
Thou halt a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm
Excite the mortified man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,
Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage? Milton.
Expert to turn the sway
Of battle, open when and where to close
The ridges of grim war. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
He that dares to die,
May laugh at the grim face of law and scorn,
The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow. Denham's Sophy.
Their swarthly hofs would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim. Addison's Cato.

GRI

2. Ugly; ill-looking.
Grim visag'd war hath smooch'd his wrinkl'd front. Shak.
Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim. Shak.
GRIMACE. n. f. [French, from grim.]
1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affection, or insolence.
He had not spar'd to shew his piques,
Against th' haranguer's politicks,
With smart remarks of leering faces,
And annotations of grimaces! Hudibras, p. iii.
The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South's Sermons.
The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Estrange's Fable 116.
The French nation is addicted to grimace. Spektator.
2. Air of affection.
Vice in a vizard, to avoid grimace,
Allows all freedom, but to see the face. Granville.
GRIMALKIN. n. f. [gris, French, grey, and malkin, or little Mall.]
1. Grey little woman; the name of an old cat.
So, poets sing,
Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. Phillips.
GRIME. n. f. [from grim.] Dirt deeply insinuated; fullying blackness not easily cleaned.
Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing so clean kept;
for why? the sweats: a man may go over shoes in the grime
of it. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.
Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood. Wardward on 'affils.
To GRIME. v. a. [from the noun.] To dirt; to fully deeply.
My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakespeare.
GRIMLY. adv. [from grim.]
1. Horribly; hideously; terribly.
We've landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor env'y'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison's Cato.
2. Sourly; sullenly.
The augurs
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.
GRIMNESS. n. f. [from grim.] Horror; frightfulness of visage.
To GRIN. v. n. [grenman, Saxon; grinnen, grinden, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French.]
1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips.
Small curs are not regarded when they grin;
But great men tremble when the lion roars. Shakespeare's H. VI.
Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st. Shakespeare.
What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away? Shakespeare.
It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth. Stirlingfleet.
A lion's hide he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryden's Æn.
They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grim'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view. Dryden.
Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter and to frantick mirth. Prior.
2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.
I like not such grinning honour as fir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end. Shakespeare's Henry IV, p. i.
GRIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and shewing them.
He laughs at him: in's face too.
—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryden.
The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin. Addison's Spectat.
Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and argument; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
GRIN. n. f. [gryn, gryene, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.
Like

GRI

Like a bird that hasteth to his gryn,
Not knowing the peril.
The grin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him. Chaucer.
To GRIND. v. a. preter. I ground; part. pass. ground. [Zunban, zegrunden, ground, Saxon.]
1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.
And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Mat.
He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry
the grinding. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal? Bentley's Sermons.
2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.
Meeting with time, slack things, said I,
Thy fith is dull; whet it, for shame:
No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty for one too sharp do find it. Herbert.
Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryd. Fables.
That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
3. To rub one against another.
So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And count'nance stern, upstanding, 'gan to grind.
His grated teeth for great disdain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge. Bacon's Nat. History.
4. To harass; to oppress.
Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessities, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves. Addis.
To GRIND. v. n. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.
Fetter'd they send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses. Milton's Agonistes.
2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.
Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws. Rowe.
GRINDER. n. s. [from grind.]
1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.
2. The instrument of grinding.
His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.
Now exhort
Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Phillips.
3. [Grind-to-day.] The back teeth; the double teeth.
The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon's Natural History.
He the raging lioness confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sandys.
The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molars, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind and commix the aliments. Ray on the Creation.
Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbuth.
4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.
One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryd. Juven.
Both he brought;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.
GRINDLESTONE. n. s. [from grind and stone.] The stone
GRINDSTONE. } on which edged instruments are sharpened.
Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindstones,
Which they dig out fro' the dells,
For their bairns bread, wives and sells. Ben. Johnson.
Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, and to whet their natural faculties. Hammond on Fundamentals.
Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file

The frightful grin
Be the winner. Addison's Spectator, No. 170.
GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.
GRIP. n. s. A small ditch. Answorth.
To GRIPE. v. a. [gripan, Gothick; gripan, Saxon; grippen, Dutch; gripp, Scottish.]
1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.
He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkl'd brows. Shakespeare's King John.
He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold. Dryden's En.
2. [Gripper, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.
A wondrous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the gripped prey. Fairy Queen.
You took occasion to be quickly woo'd
To gripe the gen'ral fway into your hands. Shakef. Hen. IV.
3. To close; to clutch.
Unlucky Welford! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou tickleth, gripest his hand the faster. Pope.
4. To pinch; to press; to squeeze.
And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that fought their food,
And gripe'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood. Dryden's Fables.
To GRIPE. v. n. To pinch the belly; to give the colick.
Thus full of counsel to the den the went,
Gripe'd all the way, and longing for a vent. Dryden.
Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Lake.
Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us. Lake.
GRIPE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.
Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws, Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy. Fairy Queen.
They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand. Shak. Macb.
Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the flairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripest with hands
Made hearty with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakef.
He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service. Shakespeare's Henry V.
I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd. Dryd. En.
2. Squeeze; pressure.
Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;
'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe. Dryden's Fables.
3. Oppression; crushing power.
I take my cause
Out of the gripest of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master. Shak. H. VIII.
4. Affliction; pinching distress.
Adam, at the news
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
Can't thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripest of smarting poverty? Orway.
5. [In the plural.] Belly-ach; colick.
In the jaundice the choler is wanting; and the ictical have a great founess and gripest, with windiness. Floyer.
GRIPER. n. s. [from gripe.] Oppressor; usurer; extortioner.
Others pretend zeal, and yet are professed usurers, gripest, monsters of men, and harpies. Burton on Melancholy.
GRIPINGLY. adv. [from gripe.] With pain in the guts.
Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work gripingly. Bacon's Natural History.
GRIPPER. n. s. A greedy snatcher; a gripping miser.
GRIPSAMBER. n. s. Used by Milton for ambergrise.
Beasts of chase, or fowl of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd, Gripsambers steam'd. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. ii.
GRISE. n. s. [See GREEZE, as it should be written.] A step,
or scale of steps.
Let me speak like ourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a gripe or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour. Shakespeare's Othello.
GRISKIN. n. s. [griggin, roast meat, Irish.] The vertebrae of a hog broiled.
GRISLY. adj. [grujlu, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible. His

GRI

His grisly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Fairy Queen.
Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadfoot grown there might I see. Spenser.
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death. Sh. H. VI.
Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king;
Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon. Milt. P. L.
For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the footy flag of Acheron. Milton.
The beauteous form of fight
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly fight. Dryden's Fables.
In vision thou shalt see the grisly face,
The king of terrors, raging in thy race. Dryd. Innocence.
Thus the grisly spectre spoke again.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a amazed wound. Dryden's Fables.
So rushes on his foe the grisly bear.
GRIST. n. s. [grist, Saxon.]
1. Corn to be ground.
Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Left miller lack water. Tusser's Husbandry.
A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at Scholars-hall. Miller of Tramp.
2. Supply; provision.
Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they;
Must fall, if matter brings no grist. Swift.
3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.
The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill. Ayliffe's Parergon.
GRISTLE. n. s. [gristle, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.
No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have no bones within them, but only little gristles. Bacon's Nat. History.
Left the asperity or hardness of these cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore these annular gristles are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Ray on the Creation.
GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.
At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes. Harvey.
She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend; more tough, and less in danger of breaking;
than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures. Mor's Antidote against Aboism.
Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans. Ray on the Creation.
They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe. Grew.
Each pipe, distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings. Blackmore's Creation.
GRIT. n. s. [grit, Greek, Saxon.]
1. The coarse part of meal.
2. Oats hulked, or coarsely ground.
3. Sand; rough hard particles.
Sleefan bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as Castile soap. Grew's Museum.
The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and reltive marle. Phillips.
4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no de-terminate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or diffused by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. They are opaque, and in many species fermenting with acids, and often fouled with heterogeneous matters. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt-water into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards diffused by water. This is the pulvis puteolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plasters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocholla of the ancients, which they used in folding gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of folding metals better than borax, and may be had for carriage from the shores of New England. The ferrugineous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.

GRO

What is commonly used in London is from Genoa. The coarse, glittering, brownish black is nearly of the same nature, but inferior, in all respects. Hill on Effluvia.
GRITTYNESS. n. s. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.
In fullers-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness. Martin's Husbandry.
GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.
I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton's Opt.
GRIZELIN. adj. [More properly gridelin. See GRIDELIN.]
The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate. Temple.
GRIZZLE. n. s. [from gris, gray; grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.
O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face? Shakespeare.
GRIZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gray.
To the boy Caesar, send this grizzled head. Shakespeare.
His beard was grizzled: no.
—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
His hair just grizzled,
As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth, their asses ears to hide. Dryd. Juven.
GRIZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, French.] Somewhat gray.
Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white;
and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon's Nat. History.
To GROAN. v. n. [granan, Saxon; groenen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.
Many an heir
Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job. xxiv. 12.
Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisd. v. 3.
So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign.
Under her own weight groaning. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.
On the blazing pile his parent lay,
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope's Odyssey.
GROAN. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty.
Alas poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.
2. Any hoarse dead sound.
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakespeare's King Lear.
GROANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad; agonizing.
Adown he keft it with so puissant wreat,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groanful found. F. Ray.
GROAT. n. s. [groat, Dutch; groffo, Italian.]
1. A piece valued at four pence.
2. A proverbial name for a small sum.
My mother was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
I dare lay a groat,
A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden's Fables.
Imagine a person of quality prevailed on to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.
3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Answorth.
GROCER. n. s. [This should be written grasser, from groffo, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.]
A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar and plumbs and spices for gain.
But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove. Garrth.
GROCERY. n. s. [from grocer.] Grocers ware, such as tea, sugar; raisins; spice.
His troops, being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart-loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon, b. viii.
GROGRAM.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,
Your only wearing is your grogeram. Donne.
Natalia affords great flore of chamelots and grograms. Sandys.
Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camlot, grogram, or the like. Brown's Vul. Err.
The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in grogram than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade. Addison's Spectator.

Plain goody would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her grogram gown. Swift.
GROIN. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation.] The part next the thigh.

The fatal dart arrives,
And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pats'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound
Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryden.
GRO'WELL. n. f. [litseperrum, Latin.] Gromill or gray-mill. A plant.

The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, cut into five long narrow segments: the flower, which is, for the most part, small, consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and open at the top: the point is uncompassed by four embryo's, which become so many roundish hard polished seeds. Miller.

GROOM. n. f. [grom, Dutch.]
1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.

Then called she a groom, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge. Fairy Queen, b. i.
From Egypt's king ambassadours they come;
Them many a squire attends, and many a groom. Fairfax.
Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom
Which brings a taper to the outward room. Donne.
In the time of Edward VI. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father, a little before, had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse.
Peacham on Poetry.

Would'st thou be touch'd
By the presuming hands of faucy grooms? Dryd. Don Sebast.
Amid' the fold he rages, nor the sheep
Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryd.

2. A young man.
I presume for to intreat this groom,
And silly maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax, b. ii.

3. A man newly married.
By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dress'd;
All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast. Dryden.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grove.]
1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.

He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.
The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other; and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, into which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Moson's Mech. Exerc.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.
The plates of iron fastened at the bottom of the box preserved the balance while it fell, and every joint of it was well grooved. Gulliver's Travels.

To GROPE. v. n. [grapan, Saxon.] To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark Grop'd I, to find out them. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;
And grope at noon, as if involv'd with night. Sandys.

A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange, Fable 131.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark grope after knowledge; as St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course,
And with his out-stretch'd arms around him grop'd. Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy rays,
I grope and guess no more, but see my way. Arbutnot.

To GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grope mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain. Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grope them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant
The bottom of the pan to grope. Swift.

GRO'PER. n. f. [from grope.] One that searches in the dark.

Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakespeare King Lear.

There are two gross volumes concerning the power of popes. Eater in Learning.

2. Shameful; unseemly.
He ripely considered how gross a thing it were for men of his quality, wife and grave men, to live with such a multitude, and to be tenants at will under them. Hooker, Preface.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hooker, b. iv.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of sundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be sin. Hooker, b. i.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.
To all sense 'tis gross
You love my son: invention is adham'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say thou do'st not. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.

Examples gross as earth exhort me. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

Like gross terms,
The prince will in the perfectness of time
Cast off his followers. Shakespeare. Henry VI. p. ii.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the gross sensuality, we cannot but admire it. Spratt's Sermons.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our wants only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficient. Smalridge's Sermons.

4. Inselegant; disproportionate in bulk.
The sun's oppressive ray the roseat bloom
Of beauty blasting, gives the gloomy hue,
And feature gross. Thomson's Summer.

5. Thick; not refined; not pure.
It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the gross, things shew greater;
but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the gross medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,
The gross feeds the purer; earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Light fumes are merry, gross fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden's Fables.

Or fuck the mists in gross air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.
If the doth then the subtle sense excel,
How gross are they that drown her in the blood? Davies.

And in clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear. Milton.

Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare flaring of the question with periphrasy and justness, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watson.

7. Coarse; rough; opposite to delicate.
Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance. Watson's Architecture.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.
GROSS. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.
The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste
The deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or, if with caution leisurely were past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison's Freethinker.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of publick blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.
Certain general inducements are used to make saleable your cause in gross. Hooker, Preface.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbot's Description of the World.

Remember, son,
You are a general: other wars require you;
For see the Saxon gross begins to move. Dryden's R. Arthur.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet, in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past. Child's Discourse on Trade.

3. Not individual, but a body together.
He hath ribbons of all the colours 't' th' rainbow; they come to him by the gross. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

You see the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated themselves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross. Dryden.

4. The

GRO

4. The chief part; the main mass.
Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things. Bacon, Essay 24.

The articulate sounds are more confused, though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon's Natural History.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [Grosse, French.]
It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GROSSLY. adv. [from gross.]
1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverized.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker, b. iv. f. 12.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shakespeare. Hen. V.

And thine eyes
See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shakespeare.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?
—Speak not so grossly. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If at any time I speak of light and rays as coloured, or endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people, in seeing all these experiments, would be apt to frame. Newton's Opt.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GROSSNESS. n. f. [from gross.]
1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; greatness of parts.

The purpose is periphrastic even as substance,
Whole grossness little characters sum up. Shakespeare.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakespeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 966.

Then all this earthy grossness quit;
Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.

So this being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opt.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inselegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.
Wife men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Afham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shak.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROTT. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.

Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE. adj. [grotesque, French; gratto, Italian.]

Distorted figure; unnatural; wildly formed.
The champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thickest overgrown, grotesque and wild, Accels deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture; the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Grotesque roofs, and stucco floors. Pope's Sat. of Horace.

GRO'TTO. n. f. [grotte, French; gratta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

GRO

The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak.
Woodward on Fossils.

GROVE. n. f. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move:
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
Thrice happy isles! Milton.

She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove. Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Grawville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

To GRO'VE. v. n. [grusile, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground feel.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.
The steel-head passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Fa. 29.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world!
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the fame. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.

Now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milt. Par. Lost.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milt. Par. Lost.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.
I must disclaim what'er he can express;
His groveling sense will show my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND. n. f. [grunds, Saxon; grundi, Danish.]

1. The earth, considered as solid, or as low.
Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea. Ex. xiv. 16.

From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.
I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jer. xxvii. 5.

There was dew upon all the ground. Judg. vi. 40.

It light on him as dew falleth on the ground. 2 Sa. xvii. 12.

Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden's Æn.

3. Land; country.
The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.

4. Region; territory.
With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
Of Baalim and Ahtaroht. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

5. Farm; estate; possession.
Uneasy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design is on thy neighbours grounds;
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dryd. Juven.

6. The floor or level of the place.
Wherefore should I finite thee to the ground? 2 Sa. ii. 22.

Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground. 1 Sa. v. 4.

A multitude sit on the ground. Mat. xv. 35.

7. Dregs; lees; faeces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors.

Set by them cyder, verjuice, four drink, or grounds. Mort.

Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal. Sharp's Surgery.

8. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.

We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with shadows and darksome colours.
Hakewill on Providence.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

9. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

Indeed

GRO

- Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.
10. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised. Get a prayer-book in your hand, And stand between two churchmen, good my lord; For on that ground I'll build a holy decant. Shakesp. R. III.
11. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest. Though jealousy of state th' invention found, Yet love refin'd upon the former ground; That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly, Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.
12. The first principles of knowledge. The concords will easily be known, if the fore grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Preface to Accidence.
- Here statemen, or of them they which can read, May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.
- After evening repasts, till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton on Education.
13. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle. He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.
- Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney, b. ii.
- The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker, b. i. f. 1.
- Thou could'st not have discern'd Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake, No ground of enmity between us known. Mit. Par. Lost.
- Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon, b. viii.
- Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roscomm.
- Love once given from her, and plac'd in you, Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.
- If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.
- Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.
- The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Aterbury's Sermons.
14. The field or place of action. Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose; And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring, Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel's C. War.
15. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire. At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.
- Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their grounds, While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryd. Aureng.
- He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Senepa. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
16. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer. Ev'n'ing mist, Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides, And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
- Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison's Spectator.
- Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on, And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addison.
17. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors. Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do, Giving no ground unto the house of York, They never then had sprung. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
- If they get ground and vantage of the king, Then join you with them like a rib of steel, To make them stronger. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
- He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Aterbury's Sermons.
- Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the others. Aterbury's Sermons.
18. State of progress or recession. I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.
- The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wears herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
19. The soil to set a thing off.

GRO

- Like bright metal on a fallen ground, My reformation glittering o'er my fault, Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes, Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakespeare.
- To GROUND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fix on the ground. Wherever she had grounded her foot, neither gods nor men could force her to retire. Rambler.
2. To found as upon cause or principle. Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.
- It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyl.
- If your own actions on your will you ground, Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryd. Aureng.
- Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.
3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge. Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph. iii. 17.
- GROUND. The preterite and part. pass. of ground. He took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder. Exo. xxxii. 20.
- How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground And polish'd, looks a diamond? Hudibras, p. iii.
- GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.
- GROUNDED-ASH. n. f. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.
- A lance of tough grounded the Trojan threw, Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dryden's Rn.
- Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call grounded. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- GROUNDED-BAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.
- Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your groundbait, and to fish. Walton's Angler.
- GROUNDED-FLOOR. n. f. [from ground and floor.] The lower story of a house.
- GROUNDED-IVY. n. f. [hedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.
- The shoots trail upon the ground, and emit roots from almost every joint, which fasten themselves into the earth: the leaves are roundish, thick, rough, and crenated on the edges: the helmet of the flower is roundish, bifid, and reflexed: the beard or lower lip is trifid, or cut into three segments; the middle segment is broad and bifid, and the flowers are produced at the joints of the shoots. The species are, full, common groundivy, or gill-go-by-ground; and second, lesser groundivy. Miller.
- Alehoof or groundivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.
- GROUNDED-OAK. n. f. [from ground and oak.] If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the coopers trade for the making of hoops, either of hael or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a groundoak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mort.
- GROUNDED-PINE. n. f. [chamaepitys, Latin.] The leaves are narrow and trifid; the flower labiated: the place of the crest of the flower is supplied with little teeth: the lower lip is divided into three parts, the middle segment being split again into two parts. The flowers rarely grow in whorles, but one or two are produced at the wings of the leaves. Miller.
- The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name groundpine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch-banks by roadsides. It is highly extolled, by the generality of medical writers, as an aperient, cephalick, and nervous medicine; but it is however little used at present. Hill's Mat. Med.
- GROUNDED-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney way, and the binding joist. Harris.

- The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbets on the groundsel is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freer fall off. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
- GROUNDEL. n. f. [fenecia, Latin.] It hath a foliaceous flower, consisting of many florets, divided into several segments fitting on the embryo, contained in an empalement consisting of one leaf, and divided into many parts, afterwards becoming of a conical figure: the embryo afterward becomes a seed, furnished with down; at which time the empalement is reflexed, to make way for the seeds to escape. Miller.
- GROUNDEWORK. n. f. [from ground and work.]
1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional.
- A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain, Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below, And mortals by the name of milky know; The groundwork is of stars. Dryden's Fables.
2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals. The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Milton.
3. First principle; original reason. The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Spenser's State of Ireland.
- The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.
- GROUP. n. f. [groupe, French; gruppo, Italian.] A croud; a cluster; a huddle; a number thronged together.
- In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
- I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zetus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dircæ to the horns of a mad bull. Addis.
- You should try your gravest tools On this odious group of fools. Swift.
- To GROUP. v. a. [grupper, French.] To put into a croud; To huddle together.

John Romane, a short clownish grub, would bear the whole carcass of an ox, yet never tugged with him. Carew.

TO GRUBBLE. v. n. [from grubben, German, from grub.] To feel in the dark.

Thou hast a colour;

Now let me rowl and grubble thee;
Blind men say white feels smooth, and black feels rough;
Thou hast a rugged skin; I do not like thee. Dryden.

GRUBSTREET. n. f. Originally the name of a street in Moorfields in London, much inhabited by writers of small histories, dictionaries, and temporary poems; whence any mean production is called grubstreet.

Χαίρει Ἰσάκη μὴ ἀείλῃ, μὴ ἀλγία πικρὰ
Ἀσπασίος ἵεν ἕδος ἱκανομαί.

The first part, though calculated only for the meridian of grubstreet, was yet taken notice of by the better sort. Gay.

I'd sooner ballads write, and grubstreet lays.

TO GRUDGE. v. a. [from grugen, according to Skinner, which in French is to grind or eat. In this sense we say of one who refents any thing secretly, he chews it. Grugnach, in Welsh, is to murmur; to grumble. Grunigh, in Scotland, denotes a grumbling morose countenance.]

1. To envy; to see any advantage of another with discontent.

What means this banishing me from your councils? Do you love your sorrow so well, as to grudge me part of it? Stany.

'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train. Shak. K. Lear.

He struggles into birth, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:
He creeps, he walks; and, issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began. Dryden.

These clamours with disdain he heard,
Much grudge'd the praise, but more the rob'd reward. Dryden.

Do not, as some men, run upon the tilt, and taste of the sediments of a grudging uncommunicative disposition. Spektat.

Let us consider the ample provision of waters, those inexhausted treasures of the ocean; and though some have grudge'd the great share that it takes of the surface of the earth, yet we shall propose this too, as a conspicuous mark and character of the wisdom of God.

I have often heard the Presbyterians say they did not grudge us our employments. Swift.

2. To give or take unwillingly.

GRU

Let me at least a funeral marriage crave,
Nor grudge my cold embraces in the grave. Dryd. Aurengz.

You steer betwixt the country and the court,
Nor gratify whate'er the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require. Dryd. Fab.

They have grudge'd those contributions, which have set our country at the head of all the governments of Europe. Addison.

TO GRUDGE. v. n.

1. To murmur; to repine.

They knew the force of that dreadful curse, whereunto idolatry maketh subject; nor is there cause why the guilty sustaining the same should grudge or complain of injustice. Hook.

2. To be unwilling; to be reluctant.

Many times they go with as great grudging to serve in his majesty's ships, as if it were to be slaves in the galleys. Raleigh.

3. To be envious.

Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned. Ja. v. 9.

4. To wish in secret. A low word.

Even in the most sincere advice he gave,
He had a grudging still to be a knave. Dryden's Medol.

5. To give or have any uneasy remains. I know not whether the word in this sense be not rather grugens, or remains; grugens being the part of corn that remains after the fine meal has passed the sieve.

My Dolabella,

Hast thou not still some grudgings of thy fever? Dryden.

GRUDGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Old quarrel; inveterate malevolence; fullen malice.

Many countries about her were full of wars, which, for old grudges to Corinth, were thought still would conclude there. Sidney, b. ii.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Let me go in to see the generals:

There is some grudge between 'em; 'tis not meet
They be alone. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

Deep-fester'd hate;

A grudge in both, time out of mind, begun,
And mutually bequeath'd from fire to son. Tate's Juvenal.

2. Anger; ill-will.

The god of wit, to shew his grudge,
Clapt his ears upon the judge. Swift.

3. Unwillingness to benefit.

4. Envy; odium; invidious censure.

Those to whom you have
With grudge prefer'd me. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

4. Remorse of conscience.

5. Some little commotion, or forerunner of a disease.

GRUDGINGLY. adj. [from grudge.] Unwillingly; malignant-ly; reluctantly.

Like harpies they could scent a plenteous board;

Then to be sure they never fail'd their lord:

The rest was form, and bare attendance paid;

They drank and eat, and grudgingly obey'd. Dryden.

GRUEL. n. f. [from gruan, gruelle, French.] Food made by boiling oatmeal in water; any kind of mixture made by boiling ingredients in water.

Finger of birth-brand'd babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab;
Make the gruel thick and lab. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Was ever Tartar fierce or cruel

Upon the strength of water gruel? Prior.

Gruel made of grain, broths, malt-drink not much hopped, posset-drinks, and in general whatever relaxeth. Arbutnot.

GRUFF. adj. [from gruff, Dutch.] Sour of aspect; harsh of manners.

Around the fiend, in hideous order, fat
Foul bawling infamy and bold debate,
Gruff discontent, through ignorance mist. Garth.

The appellation of honour was such an one the gruff, such an one the stouky. Addison.

GRUFFLY. adv. [from gruff.] Harshly; ruggedly; roughly.

The form of Mars high on a chariot stood,
All sheath'd in arms, and gruffly look'd the god. Dryden.

GRUFFNESS. n. f. [from gruff.] Ruggedness of mien; harshness of look or voice.

GRUM. adj. [contracted from grumble.] Sour; furly; severe.

A low word.

TO GRUMBLE. v. n. [from grummelen, grummen, Dutch.]

1. To murmur with discontent.

A bridegroom,
A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find. Shaksp.

Thou grumblest and railst every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

Th' accurs'd Philistian stands on th' other side, Grumbling aloud, and smiles 'twixt rage and pride. Cowley.

Suitors, all but one, will depart grumbling, because they mis of what they think their due. South's Sermons.

GUA

Providence has allotted man a competency: all beyond it is superfluous; and there will be grumbling without end, if we reckon that we want this, because we have it not. L'Estr.

L'Avare, not using half his store,
Still grumbles that he has no more. Prior.

2. To growl; to gnarl.

The lion, though he sees the toils are set,
Yet, pinch'd with raging hunger, scours away;
Hunts in the face of danger all the day;
At night, with sullen pleasure, grumbles o'er his prey. Dryd.

3. To make a hoarse rattle.

Thou grumbling thunder join thy voice. Motieus.

Like a storm

That gathers black upon the frowning sky,
And grumbles in the wind. Rowe's Royal Convert.

Vapours foul

Dash on the mountains brow, and shake the woods
That grumbling wave below. Thomson's Winter.

GRUMBLER. n. f. [from grumble.] One that grumbles; a murmurer; a discontented man.

The half-pence are good half-pence, and I will stand by it: if I made them of silver, it would be the same thing to the grumbler. Swift.

GRUMBLING. n. f. [from grumble.] A murmuring through discontent; a grudge.

I have serv'd

Without or grudge or grumbings. Shaksp. Tempest.

GRUME. n. f. [grumeau, French; grumus, Latin.] A thick viscid confluence of a fluid: as the white of an egg, or clotted like cold blood. Quincy.

GRUMLY. adv. [from grum.] Sullenly; morosely.

GRUMMEL. n. f. [litigapermum, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

GRUMOUS. adj. [from grume.] Thick; clotted.

The blood, when let, was black, grumous, the red part without a due confluence, the serum saline, and of a yellowish green. Arbutnot on Diet.

GRUMOUSNESS. n. f. [from grumous.] Thickness of a coagulated liquor.

The cause may be referred either to the coagulation of the serum, or grumousness of the blood. Wise man's Surgery.

GRUNSEL. n. f. [More usually groundfil, unless Milton intended to preserve the Saxon grunb.] The groundfil; the lower part of the building.

Next came one

Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lopp'd off
In his own temple, on the grunsel edge,
Where he fell flat, and sham'd his worshippers. Milton.

TO GRUNT. v. n. [grunio, Latin.] To murmur like

TO GRUNTLE. v. a. a hog.

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. Shaksp.

Lament, ye swine! in gruntings spend your grief;
For you, like me, have lost your sole relief. Gay's Past.

Thy brinded boars may slumber undisturb'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chequer shade. Tickel.

The folding quean to louder notes doth rise,
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;
The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round. Swift.

GRUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] The noise of a hog.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs;
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.

From hence were heard

The grunts of bristled boars, and groans of bears,
And herds of howling wolves. Dryden's En.

GRUNTER. n. f. [from grunt.]

1. He that grunts.

2. A kind of fish. [Xepolis.] Ainsworth.

GRUNTLING. n. f. [from grunt.] A young hog.

TO GRUTCH. v. n. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from grudge.] To envy; to repine; to be discontented.

The poor at the enclosure doth grutch,
Because of abuses that fall,
Left some men should have but too much,
And some again nothing at all. Tusser's Husbandry.

But what we're born for we must bear,
Our frail condition it is such,
That what to all may happen here,
It's chance to me, I must not grutch. Ben. Johnson.

GRUTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Malice; ill-will.

In it he melted leaden bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;
To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter t' any such. Hudibras, p. i.

GRV. n. f. [γρῦ.] Any thing of little value: as, the paring of the nails. Lat.

GUAIACUM. n. f. [See LIGNUM-VITÆ.]

Guaiacum is attenuant and aperient, and promotes discharges by sweat and urine. It is an excellent medicine in many chronick cases, and was once famous for curing the venereal venereal disease, which it still does singly in warmer climates, but with us we find it insufficient. We have a resin of it, improperly called gum guaiacum, given in the same cases with the famous balsamum polycresum is made of it. Hill.

GUARANTEE, n. f. [garantir, French.] A power who undertakes to see stipulations performed.

God, the great guarantee for the peace of mankind, where laws cannot secure it, may think it the concern of his providence.

A prince distinguished by being a patron of Protestants, and guarantee of the Westphalian treaty. Addison on the War.

TO GUARANTY, v. a. [garantir, French.] To undertake to secure the performance of any articles.

GUARDSHIP, n. f. [from guard.]

1. Care; protection.

How blest am I, by such a man led! Under whose wife and careful guardship I now despise fatigue and hardship. Swift.

2. [Guard and ship.] A king's ship to guard the coast.

GUAVA, n. f.

The flowers consist of five leaves, produced in a circular order, having many stamina or threads surrounding the ovary; the ovary is of a long tubulous figure, which becomes a fleshy fruit, crowned on the top, and containing many small hard seeds. The fruit, says Sir Hans Sloane, is extremely delicious and wholesome. They have only this inconvenience, that, being very astringent, they stop up the belly, if taken in great quantities. Miller.

GUVERNATION, n. f. [gubernatio, Lat.] Government; superintendency; superior direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is transacted by the man Jesus, inhabited by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

GU'VEON, n. f. [guyon, French.]

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbot dignify my boards; But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

This he did to draw you in, like to many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.

2. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allurement; gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike.

But fish not with this melancholy bait, For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.

GUERDON, n. f. [guerdon, gardon, French.] A reward; a recompense. A word now no longer in use.

Hearken'd, and did slay from further harms, To gain so goodly guerdon as the spake. Fairy Queen, b. i.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see, By him who has the guerdon of his guile, For so misfiguring her true knight to be. Fairy Queen, b. i.

He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive the just guerdon of all his former villainies. Knight.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise To scorn delights, and live laborious days; But the fair guerdon when we hope to find, And think to burst out into sudden blaze, Comes the blind fury with the' abhorred sheers, And flits the thin-spun life. Millin.

TO GUESS, v. a. [guessen, Dutch.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents! You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death. Shaksp.

Let not your ears despite my tongue for ever, Which shall possess them with the heaviest found

That

That ever yet they heard. — Hum! I guess at it. Shaksp. Macbeth.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come, where God pleases not to give impediment? Raleigh's History of the World.

There issue swarming bands Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drefs, To be Taxallan enemies I guess. Dryd. Indian Emperor.

The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess, How that ungrateful charming maid My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God. Stillington's Defence of Dico, on Rom. Idol.

TO GUESS, v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart. Locke.

GUESS, n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers: Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces. Shaksp.

A poet must confess His art's like physics, but a happy guess. Dryden.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess, Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.

GUESSER, n. f. [from guess.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a croquet, To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor, To give thee lawn-sleeves, a mitre and rochet, Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUESSINGLY, adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly.

What confederacy have you with the traitors Late footed in the kingdom? — I have a letter guessingly set down, Which came from one that's of a neutral heart, And not from one oppos'd. Shaksp. King Lear.

GUEST, n. f. [gæst, gyst, Saxon; gwest, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a finner. Lu. xix. 7.

2. Methinks a father Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest That best becomes the table. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Tell my royal guest I add to his commands my own request. Dryden's Æn.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O dearest, dearest! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting. Sidney.

Those happiest smiles That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakspere.

GUESTCHAMBER, n. f. [guest and chamber.] Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? Mar. xiv. 14.

TO GUGGLE, v. n. [gorgoliare, Italian.] To found as water running with intermissions out of a narrow mouthed vessel.

GUIDAGE, n. f. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Ainsworth.

GUIDANCE, n. f. [from guide.] Direction; government.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them. Atterbury's Sermons.

Particular application must be left to Christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Swift.

GUI

TO GUIDE, v. a. [guider, French.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth. Jo. xvi. 13.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours' coffers. Decay of Piety.

Whoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South's Sermons.

2. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me. Pf. xxxi. 3.

3. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house. Decay of Piety.

GUIDE, n. f. [guide, French, from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Judas was guide to them that took Jesus. Acts i. 16.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire, to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wisd. xviii. 3.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance So far to make us with for ignorance? And rather in the dark to grope our way, Than led by a false guide to err by day? Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young his father dy'd, And left him to an happy guide. Waller.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such art or knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried, But we have sure experience for our guide. Dryden's Fables.

GUIDELESS, adj. [from guide.] Without a guide; without a governor or superintendent.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost, Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd, To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd. Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow, Whose every puff bears empty shades away, Which guideless in those dark dominions stray. Dryden.

GUIDER, n. f. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shak.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vital, opened an imposthume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his surgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUIDON, n. f. [French.] A standardbearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD, n. f. [gildscip, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.]

A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word gild or guild-hall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution. Cowel.

Towards three or four o'clock Look for the news that the guild hall affords. Shak. R. III.

In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait At some sick miser's triple-bolted gate, For their defrauded absent foals they make A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope's Dunciad.

GUILLE, n. f. [guille, gille, old French, the same with wile.]

Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile, And looking lovely, and oft sighing fore, Her constant heart did court with divers guile; But words and looks, and sighs she did abhor. Fairy Queen.

When I have most need to employ a friend, Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile, Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n, When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shak. Rich. III.

We may, with more successful hope, resolve To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn: Subtle he needs must be who could seduce Angels. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

GUILFUL, adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skillful against guile. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.

Without expence at all, By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd. Shak. H. VI.

GUI'LTYNESS. n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.
He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness. Sidney, b. ii.
The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness. Shaksp. Richard III.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shaksp.peare.
GUI'LTLSS. adv. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.
I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shaksp. R. III.
Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shaksp.peare's Othello.
Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Num. v. 31.
Thou, who do'st all thou wilt at thy will,
And never wiltst aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.
Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he, that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.
Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.
GUI'LTLSSLY. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.
GUI'LTLSSNESS. n. f. [from guiltless.] Innocence; freedom from crime.
A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than guilt, felt that guiltless is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney, b. ii.
I would not have had any hand in his death, of whole guiltless I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.
GUI'LTLY. adv. [giltig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]
1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.
Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?
—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shaksp.peare's Love's Labour Lost.
Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence's death? Shak.
We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Gen. xlii. 21.
With mortal hatred I purf'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd, yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryden.

GUL

Farewell the fumes
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans. Dryden.
There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson's Sermons.

Like such as blow away their lives,
And never will redeem a day,
Enamour'd of their golden gyves? Ben. Johnson's Forest.
- The poor prisoners, ready to take the occasion offered, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Knolles.
Do'st thou already fingle me? I thought Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton's Agonistes.
- But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet
A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryd. Fables.
- TO GYVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.
- With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship. Shakespeare's Othello.

HAI

Thus spoke th' impatient prince, and made a pause;
His foul hags rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;
And all the powers of hell, in full applause,
Flourish'd their snakes, and tost their flaming brands. Craib.

2. A witch; an enchantress.
Out of my door, you witch! you hag; you baggage, you poulcat, you runnion. Shakef. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. An old ugly woman.
Such affections may become the young;
But thou, old hag, of threescore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee? Dryden's Juven.

TO HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.
That makes them in the dark see visions,
And hag themselves with apparitions. Hudibras, p. iii.

fancy of omens, tales, and visions! L'Estrange.

HA'GARD. adj. [bagard, French.]
1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.
To let them down before that his flights end,
As bagard hawk, presuming to contend
With hardy fowl above his able might,
His weary pounces all in vain doth spend,
To trust the prey too heavy for his flight. Fairy Queen.

2. [Hager, German.] Lean. To this fence I have put the following passage; for the author ought to have written.
A hagged carion of a wolf, and a jolly fort of dog, with good flesh upon's back, fell into company together. L'Estr.

3. [Hage, Welsh.] Ugly; rugged; deformed; wildly disordered.
She's too disdainful;
I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As bagard as the rock. Shakespeare.
Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,
His hands and bagard eyes to heav'n he cast. Dryden's En.
Where are the conficuous looks, the face now pale,
Now flushing red, the down-cast bagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd! Smith's Phæd. and Hipp.

HA'GGARD. n. f.
1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard. Shakespeare.

2. A species of hawk.
Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the South by thy direction fly? Sandys.
I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the aires, the brancher, the raniish hawk, and the haggard. Walton's Angler.

3. A hag. So Garth has us'd it for want of understanding it.
Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew,
In a dark grot, the baleful haggard lays,
Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth.

HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] Deformed; ugly.
For her the rich Arabia sweats her gum;
And precious oils from distant Indies come,
How haggardly fo'er the looks at home. Dryd. Juven.

HA'GGESS. n. f. [from bag or back.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and inclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with fuet and spices.

dering hailshot, from the pieces comit towards the top of the hill. Playward.

HA'ILSTONE. n. f. [hail and stone.] A particle or single ball of hail.
You are no furer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the fun. Shakespeare.
Hard hailstones lye not thicker on the plain,
Nor shaken oaks such show'rs of acorns rain. Dryden.

HA'ILY. adj. [from hair.] Consisting of hail.
From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold North congeals to haily flowers. Pope.

HAIR. n. f. [hæp, Saxon.]
1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegu-ment or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow. Quinn.

2. A single hair.
My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakespeare. Tit. And.
Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a drill? Locke.

Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Much is breeding;
Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Any thing proverbially small.
If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written. Dryden.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.
Mr. doctor, he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

HA'IRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written bare- brained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unfteady.
Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrain'd slaves,
And hunger will enforce them be more eager. Shakef. H. VI.

HA'IRBREADTH. n. f. [hair and breadth.] A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.
Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss. Judas, xx. 16.

who is armed with a halberd.
The dutches appointed him a guard of thirty persons, hal- berdiers, in a liverly of murrey and blue, to attend his person.
Bacon's Henry VII.

The king had only his halberdiers, and fewer of them than us'd to go with him. Clarendon.

HA'LCYON. n. f. [halcyo, Latin.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.
Such smiling rogues, as these, sooth ev'ry passion,
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their matters. Shakef. K. Lear.
Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be,
As halcyons brooding on a Winter sea. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

HA'LCYON. adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still;
peaceful.
When great Augustus made war's tempests cease,
His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace. Denham.

For they been hale enough I trow,
And liken their abode. Spenser's Pastorals.
Some of these wife partizans concluded the government had hired two or three hundred hale men, to be pinioned, if not executed, as representatives of the pretended captives.
Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 7.

His stomach too begins to fail;
Last year we thought him strong and hale,
But now he's quite another thing:
I wish he may hold out 'till Spring. Swift.

TO HALE. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.] To drag by force; to pull violently.
Fly to your house;
The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And hale him up and down. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast
Hal'd out to murder. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he hale thee to the judge. Lu. xii. 58.

He by the neck hath hal'd, in pieces cut,
And set me as a mark on every butt. Sandys.

Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought.
This sinistrous gravity is drawn that way by the great artery, which then subsideth, and haleth the heart unto it. Brown.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant bankers after something else. L'Estrange's Fables.
Do't thou not banker after a greater liberty in some things! If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution. Calamy.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always banking after the diversions of the town. Addison's Spectator.
The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many bankerings after its ancient liberty. Addison on Italy.

HAN'T, for has not, or have not.

That roguish leer of your's makes a pretty woman's heart ake: you han't that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addison.

HAP. n. f. [happ, in Welsh, is misfortune.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot fill him the like hap. Hooker.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flow'ring forest rash the sled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. F. 2.
A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the surest shield. Sidney.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hooker, b. iv.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Kneller.

Nor feared the among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had the seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray:
Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax, b. vi.

HAP-HAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge sake. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and without ever having examined them; and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

To HAP. v. n. [from the noun.] To come by accident; to fall out; to happen.

It will be too late to gather provision from abroad, for the furnishing of ships or soldiers, which peradventure may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom. Spenser on Ireland.

Run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd. Shak. Othello.

In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant people. Bacon.

HA'PLY. adv. [from hap.]

1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shakespeare.

To warn

Us, haply too secure, of our discharge
From penalty, because from death releas'd
Some days. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Then haply yet your breast remains untouch'd,
Though that seems strange. Rowe's Royal Convert.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift on the Dissent in Athens and Rome.

2. By chance; by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream,
Him haply flum'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

HA'PLESS. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky.

HAR

Hapless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire mishap! Shakespeare.
Here hapless Icarus had found his part,
Had not the father's grief restrain'd his art. Dryden's Æn.
Did his hapless passion equal mine,
I would refuse the bliss. Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

To HA'PPEN. v. n. [from hap.]

1. To fall out; to chance; to come to pass.
Bring forth your strong reasons, and shew us what shall happen. Is. xl. 22.

Say not I have sinned, and what harm hath happened unto me. Ecclesi. v. 4.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprized, as if some unexpected thing had happened to thee. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. To light; to fall by chance.

I have happened on some other accounts relating to mortalities. Grawnt's Bills of Mortality.

HA'PPILY. adv. [from happy.]

1. Fortunately; luckily; successfully.

Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatick seas,
I come to wife it wealthy in Padua: Shakespeare.
If wealthy, then happily o'erthrown,
Prefer'd by conquest, happily o'erthrown, Waller.

Falling they rise to be with us made one.

Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end happily; for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.

2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.

Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. In a state of felicity; as, he lives happily.

4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for happy.

One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may peruse these two treatises. Digby.

HA'PPINESS. n. f. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.

Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooker, b. i.

Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.

Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope on Criticism.

HA'PPY. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]

1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.

At other end Uran did Strephon lend
Her happy making hand. Sidney.

—If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Beget you happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine
About the supreme throne

Of him, whose happy making fight alone,
When once our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.

Though the preference of imaginary good cannot make us happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.

2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.

Chymists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

Yet in this agony his fancy wrought,
And fear supply'd him with this happy thought. Dryden.

3. Addressful; ready.

One gentleman is happy at a reply, and another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.

HA'QUETON. n. f. A piece of armour. Spenser.

HARA'NGUE. n. f. [haranguer, French.] The original of the French word is much questioned: Menage thinks it a corruption of bearing, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from arare, or orationare, or orationer, or aranger, haranguer. A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors mix'd,
In factious opposition. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

A multitude of preachers neglect method in their harangues. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

HAR

To HARA'NGUE. v. n. [haranguer, French.] To make a speech; to pronounce an oration.

HARA'NGUER. n. f. [from haranguer.] An orator; a publick speaker: generally with some mixture of contempt.

To HA'RASS. v. a. [harasser, French, from harasser, a heavy buckler, according to Du Cange.] To weary; to fatigue; to tire with labour and uneasiness.

These troops came to the army but the day before, harass'd with a long and wearisome march. Bacon's War with Spain.

Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,
And harass'd out with duty. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Nature oppress'd, and harass'd out with care,
Sinks down to rest. Addison's Cato.

HA'RASS. n. f. [from the verb.] Waste; disturbance.

The men of Judah, to prevent

The harass of their land, best me round. Milton's Agonist.

HA'RBERGER. n. f. [herberger, Dutch, one who goes to provide lodgings or an harbour for those that follow.] A fore-runner; a precursor.

Make all our trumpets speak, give them all breath,
Those clam'rous harbingers of blood and death. Sh. Macb.

I'll be myself the harbinging, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach. Shak. Macb.

Sin, and her shadow death, and misery,
Death's harbinging. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix. l. 13.

Love's harbinging, appear'd. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi.

Before him a great prophet, to proclaim
His coming, is sent harbinging, who all Invites. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

As Ormond's harbinging to you they run;
For Venus is the promise of the Sun. Dryden.

HA'RBOUR. n. f. [herberge, French; herberg, Dutch; albergo, Italian.]

1. A lodging; a place of entertainment.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd;
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd. Dryd. Fables.

Doubly curs'd
Be all those easy fools who give it harbour. Rowe's J. Sheras

2. A port or haven for shipping.

Three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly. Shakespeare's Merch. of Ven.

They leave the mouths of Po,
That all the borders of the town o'erflow;
And spreading round in one continu'd lake,
A spacious hospitable harbour make. Addison on Italy.

3. An asylum; a shelter; a place of shelter and security.

To HA'RBOUR. v. n. [from the noun.] To receive entertainment; to sojourn; to take shelter.

This night let's harbour here in York. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

They are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord would be. Shakespeare.

Southwards they bent their flight,
And harbour'd in a hollow rock at night:
Next morn they rose, and set up every sail;
The wind was fair, but blew a mackrel gale. Dryden.

Let me be grateful; but let far from me
Be fawning cringe, and false dissembling look,
And servile flattery, that harbours oft
In courts and gilded roofs. Phillips.

To HA'RBOUR. v. a.

1. To entertain; to permit to reside:

My lady bids me tell you, that though the harbours you as her uncle, she's nothing allied to your disorders. Shakespeare.

Knaves I know, which in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Let not your gentle breast harbour one thought
Of outrage from the king. Rowe's Royal Convert.

We owe this old house the same kind of gratitude that we do to an old friend who harbours us in his declining condition, nay even in his last extremities. Pope.

How people, so greatly warm'd with a sense of liberty,
Should be capable of harbouring such weak superstition; and that so much bravery and so much folly can inhabit the same breasts. Pope.

2. To shelter; to secure.

Harbour yourself this night in this castle, because the time requires it; and, in truth, this country is very dangerous for murdering thieves to trust a sleeping life among them. Sidney.

HA'ROURAGE. n. f. [herbergage, Fr. from harbour.] Shelter; entertainment.

Let in us, your kings, whose labour'd spirits,
Forewearied in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shakespeare's King John.

HA'ROURER. n. f. [from harbour.] One that entertains another.

HARBOURLESS. adj. [from harbour.] Without harbour; without lodging; without shelter.

- HA'REQUIN, n. f.* [This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a busy buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le quint. Menage derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented M. Harlay's house, whom his friends called Harlequin, little Harley. 1. ev.] A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace; a Jack-pudding; a zani.
The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress. Dryden.
The man in graver tragick known,
Though his best part long since was done,
Still on the stage desires to tarry;
And he who play'd the harlequin,
After the jest still loads the scene,
Unwilling to retire, though weary. Prior.
- HARLOT, n. f.* [from harle, French, a girl. Others for harlet, a little whore. Others from the name of the mother of William the Conqueror. Harlet is used in Chaucer for a low male drudge.] A whore; a strumpet.

Some harlet's spirit. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
They help thee by such aids as geese and harlots. Ben. Jonson.
The barbarous harlots crowd the publick place;
Go, fools, and purchase an unclean embrace. Dryd. Juven.
- HA'RLOTRY, n. f.* [from harlot.]
1. The trade of a harlot; fornication.
Nor shall,
From Rome's tribunal, thy harangues prevail
Gainst harlotry, while thou art clad so thin. Dryd. Juven.- 2. A name of contempt for a woman.
A peevish self-will'd harlotry,
That no persuasion can do good upon. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

HARM, n. f. [from harm, Saxon.]
1. Injury; crime; wickedness.
2. Mischief; detriment; hurt.
We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harm, which the wise powers Deny us for our good. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
They should be suffered to write on: it would keep them out of harm's way, and prevent them from evil courses. Swift.

To HARM, v. a. To hurt; to injure.
What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I saw't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me. Shakespeare, Othello.
Passions ne'er could grow
To harm another, or impeach your rest. Wallar. After.

HAR

- After their young are hatched, they brood them under their wings, lest the cold, and sometimes the heat, should harm them. Ray on the Creation.
- HA'RMFUL, adj.* [from harm and full.] Hurtful; mischievous; noxious; injurious; detrimental.
His dearly loved squire
His spear of heben-wood behind him bare,
Whose harmful head, thrice heated in the fire,
Had riven many a breast with pike-head square. Fa. Queen.
Let no man fear that harmful creature lels, because he fees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.
The earth brought forth fruit and food for man, without any mixture of harmful quality. Raleigh's History.
For flax and oats will burn the tender field,
And sleepy poppies harmful harvests yield. Dryden's Georg.
- HA'RMFULLY, adv.* [from harmful.] Hurtfully; noxiously; detrimentally.
A scholar is better occupied in playing or sleeping, than spending his time not only vainly, but harmfully in such kind of exercise. Afham's Schoolmaster.
- HA'RMFULNESS, n. f.* [from harmful.] Hurtfulness; mischievousness; noxiousness.
HA'RMLESS, adj. [from harm.] Not hurtful.
1. Innocent; innoxious; not hurtful.
Touching ceremonies harmless in themselves, and hurtful only in respect of number, was it amiss to decree that those things that were least needful, and newlest come, should be the first that were taken away? Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.
She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting Each object with a joy. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.- 2. Unhurt; undamaged.
The shipwright will be careful to gain by his labour, or at least to save himself harmless, and therefore fuit his work slightly, according to a slight price. Raleigh's Essays.

HA'RMLESSLY, adv. [from harmless.] Innocently; without hurt; without crime.
He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmlessly, and in a recreation that became a churchman. Walton.
Bullets batter the walls which stand inflexible, but fall harmlessly into wood or feathers. Decay of Piety.

HA'RMLESSNESS, n. f. [from harmless.] Innocence; freedom from injury or hurt.
When, through tasteless flat humility,
In dough-bak'd men some *harmless*ness we see,
'Tis but his plegm that's virtuous, and not he. Dome.
Compare the *harmless*ness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous plianeness to virtuous counsels, which is in youth untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the fallhood, and the confirmed obsequy in an aged long-practised sinner. South.

HA'RMONICAL, adj. [from harmonia, French.] Pro-
HA'RMONICK, adj. [from harmonia, French.] Portioned to each other; adapted to each other; concordant; musical.
After every three whole notes, nature requireth, for all harmonical use, one half note to be interposed. Bacon's N. Hist.
Harmonical sounds, and discordant sounds, are both active and positive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, but privatives. Bacon's Natural History.
So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to as,
Harmonick twang of leather, horn, and brais. Pope.

HARMONIOUS, adj. [from harmonia, French, from harmonia.]
1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other.
All the wide-extended sky,
And all th' harmonious words on high,
And Virgil's sacred work shall dye. Cowley.
God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Locke.- 2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical.
Harmony in wedded pair,
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.
The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us: they who lived with him, and some time after him, thought it musical. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

HARMONIOUSLY, adv. [from harmonious.]
1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.
Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruised;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree. Pope.
That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley's Sermons.- 2. Musically; with concord of sounds.
If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not therefore to worship the instrument, but him that makes the music. Stillington's Def. of Disj. on Rom. Idol.

HAR

- HARMONIOUSNESS, n. f.* [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.
To HARMONIZE, v. a. [from harmonia.] To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.
Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.
- HARMONY, n. f.* [from harmonia, French.]
1. The just adaptation of one part to another.
The pleasures of the eye and ear are but the effects of equality, good proportion, or correspondence; so that equality and correspondence are the causes of harmony. Bacon.
The harmony of things,
As well as that of sounds, from discord springs. Denham.
Sure infinite wisdom must accomplish all its works with consummate harmony, proportion, and regularity. Cheyne.- 2. Just proportion of sound; musical concord.
Harmony is a compound idea, made up of different sounds united. Watts's Logic.
- 3. Concord; correspondent sentiment.
In us both one soul,
Harmony to behold in wedded pair!
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.
I no sooner in my heart divin'd,
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet! Milton.

HARNESS, n. f. [from harnais, French, supposed from iern or hiern, Runkick; hiarn, Welsh and Erse, iron.]
1. Armour; defensive furniture of war.
A goodly knight, all dress'd in harness meet,
That from his head no place appeared to his feet. F. Queen.
Doff thy harness, youth:
I am to-day i' th' vein of chivalry. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.
Of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. i.
Were I a great man, I should fear to drink:
Great men should drink with harness on their throats. Shak.- 2. The traces of draught horses, particularly of carriages of pleasure or state; of other carriages we say gear.
Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl. Shakespeare.
Their steeds around,
Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

To HARNESS, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To dress in armour.
He was harnes'd light, and to the field goes he. Shakespeare.
Full fifty years, harnes'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting Winter's blast. Rowe.- 2. To fix horses in their traces.
Before the door her iron chariot flood,
All ready harnes'd for journey new. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Harnes'd the horses, and get up the horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets. Jer. xlv. 4.
When I plow my ground, my horse is harnes'd and chained to my plough. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
To the harnes'd yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil. Thomson.

HARP, n. f. [from harp, Saxon; harpe, French. It is used through both the Teutonick and Roman dialects, and has been long in use.
Romanus, lyra plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpā. Ven. Fort.]
1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and struck with the finger.
Arion, when through tempests cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet music which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spenser.
They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire,
The mules sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryden.- 2. A constellation.
Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies
The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;
This when sweet Orpheus struck, to list'ning rocks
He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks. Creuch's Manilus.

To HARP, v. n. [from harp, French, from the noun.]
1. To play on the harp.
I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Rev.
Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped. 1 Cor. xiv. 7.
The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born heir. Milton.
I conceive you harp a little too much upon one string. Collier on Pride.- 2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.
Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
11 A

HAR

For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear. Shaksp. Meas. for Measure.
Macbeth, beware Macduff!
Beware the thane of Fife: dismiss me: enough.
—Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'lt harp'd my fear aright. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He seems
Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
HARPER. n. f. [from harp.] A player on the harp.
Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song. Shakespeare.
I'm the god of the harp, my fairest:—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again. Tickell.
HARPING iron. n. f. [from harpage, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.
The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe;
Who, when he felt his side so rudely gor'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd. Waller.
HARPONEER. n. f. [harponeur, French, from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.
HARPOON. n. f. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.
HARPSICORD. n. f. A musical instrument.
HARPY. n. f. [harpys, Latin; harpies, harpys, French.]
The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures; which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Raleigh.
That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.
2. A ravenous wretch.
I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakespeare.
HARQUEBUSS. n. f. [See ARQUEBUSE.] A handgun.
HARQUEBUSSIER. n. f. [from harquebus.] One armed with a harquebus.
About thirty paces off were placed twenty thousand nimble harquebusiers, ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Kneller.
HARRIDAN. n. f. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed trumpet.
She just endur'd the Winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk. Swift.
HARROW. n. f. [charroue, French; harcke, German, a rake.]
A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over fowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the seed.
The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows. Dryden's Georgick.
Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To HARROW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To break with the harrow.
Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means.
Not only thy peason, but also thy beans. Tuff. Husbandry.
Can't thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow?
or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job xxxix. 10.
Let the Volcians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy, I'll never Be such a gossling to obey instinct. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
2. To tear up; to rip up.
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Sh.
Imagine you behold me bound and scour'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on this rending rack. Rowe.
3. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.
As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon's Henry VII.
4. To invade; to harass with incursions. [From pergian,
Saxon.]
And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stowre,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 10.
Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Didst make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, didst bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser's Sonnets.
5. To disturb; to put into commotion. [This should rather be written harry, harer, French.]
Most like: it harrows me with fear and wonder. Shakespeare.

HAR

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care. Milton.
Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this curled light,
To see my lord so deadly damnify'd? Fairy Queen, b. ii.
HARROW. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now
out of use.
HARROWER. n. f. [from harrow.]
1. He who harrows.
2. A kind of hawk. Ansforth.
To HARRY. v. a. [harer, French.]
1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle.
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.
—I repent me much
That I to harry'd him. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a neff; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of houys and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See TO HARROW.
HARSH. adj. [herufche, German, Skinner.]
1. Austere; roughly four.
Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought to appear. Denham.
Sweet, bitter, four, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.
The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.
2. Rough to the ear.
A name unmusical to Volcanic ears,
And harsh in sound to thine. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But fate needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line. Dryden.
The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.
Thy lord commands thee now
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To serve duties. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 5.
3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.
He was a wife man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon's Henry VII.
Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Taylor.
No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou can't not praise. Prior.
A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him. Atterbury's Sermons.
4. Rugged to the touch.
Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle on Colours.
5. Unpleasing; rigorous.
With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Dryd.
HARSHLY. adj. [from harsh.]
1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.
2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.
Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.
I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.
4. Ruggedly to the ear.
My wife is in a wayward mood to-day:
I tell you, 'twould found harshly in her ears. Shakespeare.
Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating to harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shaksp. Hamlet.
A hollow groan, a murr'ring wind arose;
The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring found, and harshly rung. Dryd. Fables.
HARSHNESS. n. f. [from harsh.]
1. Sourness; austere taste.
Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.
2. Roughness to the ear.
Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.
Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Tis

HAR

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The found must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.
3. Ruggedness to the touch.
Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon's Natural History.
4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.
No, Regan, you shall never have my curse:
Thy tender-hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shaksp. King Lear.
HART. n. f. [Saxon, Saxon.] A he-deer of the large kind;
the male of the roe.
That infant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. Mary's Virgil's Georg.
HARTSHORN. n. f.
Harshorn is a drug that comes into use as many ways, and under as many forms, as any one in the whole materia medica.
What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag, called the hart deer. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill's Mat. Med.
Rameole concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woodward on Fossils.
HARTSHORN. n. f. An herb. Ansforth.
HART-ROYAL. n. f. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.
HARTSTONGUE. n. f. [lingua cervina, Latin.] A plant.
It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.
Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HARTWORT. n. f. [terrythum, Latin.] It is an umbelliferous plant, with a rose-shaped flower, consisting of five unequal heart-fashioned petals, which are placed circularly and rest on the empalement, which afterwards becomes an almost round fruit, composed of two flat seeds, which easily cast off their covering with a raised border, which are commonly indented.
It is an annual plant, and perishes soon after it has perfected its seed. It is found wild in several parts of England. Miller.
HARVEST. n. f. [Saxon, Saxon.]
1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.
As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the lime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
With harvest work he is worse than he was in the Spring. L'Estrange.
2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shak. H. VI.
When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find. Dryden.
3. The product of labour.
Let these small cots and hills suffice:
Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden's Juven.
4. The long which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.
Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden's K. Arthur.
5. The time of gathering harvest.
At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay,
And better Ceres, trembling to approach
The little barrel. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 4.
6. The opportunity of gathering treasure.
His wife seems to be well favoured: I will use it as the key of the cuckoo's rook's coffee; and there's my harvest-home.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
HARVEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper at the harvest.
Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tuff. Husbandry.
HARVESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.
HARVESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.
Like to a harvest-mon, that's talk'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

HAS

To HASH. v. n. [hacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces, and mingle.
He rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick, Hudibras, p. i.
As if he meant to hash her quick.
What have they to complain of but too great variety, tho' some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order, and politeness; but hashed up in haste. Garth.
HASH. n. f. This seems to signify a cafe or habitation made of rushes or flags.
Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Establish'd hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes' hash. Spenser's Pastoral.
HA'SLET. n. f. [hasla, Islandick, a bundle; haslerel, has- HA'SLET.] n. f. [hasla, haslerel, French.] The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe and part of the throat to it.
HASP. n. f. [Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called hasp.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.
Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.
HA'SSOCK. n. f. [hasack, German. Skinner.]
1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.
He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.
2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hasp are the same.
HAST. The second person singular of have.
HASTE. n. f. [haste, French; haste, Dutch.]
1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.
Spare him, death!
Let not pity with her tears
Keep such distance from thine ears:
But O, thou wilt not, canst not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Craftau.
Our liars reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age writ;
In both we find like negligence and wit. Waller.
In as much haste as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
The wretched father, running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.
2. Passion; vehemence.
I laid in my haste, all men are liars. Pf. cxvi. 11.
To HASTE. v. n. [haster, French; hasten, Dutch.]

They were troubled and hasted away. Pf. xviii. 5.
All those things are pass'd away like a shadow, and as a post that hasted by. Wisd. v. 9.
Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.
These rites perform'd, the prince, without delay,
Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryden's Æn.
To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope's Odyssey.
Soon as the sun awakes the sprightly court,
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.

Or if the earlier season lead
To the tann'd bay cock in the mead. Milton.
Bring them for food sweet boughs and oars cut,
Nor all the Winter long thy bay rick shut. May's Virgil.
Some turners turn long and slender sprigs of ivory, as small as an hay stalk. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
The best manure for meadows is the bottom of hay mows and hay stacks. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Hay and oats, in the management of a groom, will make ale. Swift.
By some bay cock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his heads both even song and morn. Dryden.
Blouzelinda, in a gamefome mood,
Behind a bay cock loudly laughing flood. Gay's Pastorals.
The hum of bees inviting sleep sincere,
Into the guileless breast, beneath the shade,
Or thrown at large amid' the fragrant bay. Thom's Autumn.
To dance the HAY. To dance in a ring: probably from dancing round a hay cock.
I will play on the tabor to the worthies,
And let them dance the bay. Shakefp. Love's Labour Lost.
This maids think on the hearth they see,
When fires well nigh consumed be,
There dancing bays by two and three,
Just as your fancy calls them. Drayton's Nymphid.
The gum and glitt'nings, which with art
And study'd method, in each part Hangs down the heart,
Looks just as if that day
Snails there had crawl'd the bay. Suckling.
HAY. n. f. [from baie, French, a hedge.] A net which incloses the haunt of an animal.
Cones are destroyed by bays, curs, spaniels, or tumblers bred up for that purpose. Mortimer's Husbandry.

grafs for hay.
As to the return of his health and vigour, were you here, you might enquire of his haymakers. Pope to Swift.
HAZARD. n. f. [hazard, French; azar, Spanish; bafsi, Ru-nick, danger.]
1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.
I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shakefp. Rich. III.
I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well. Shak.
Where the mind does not perceive this connection, there mens opinions are not the product of judgment, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.
2. Danger; chance of danger.
We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein so many things are laid open, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved. Hooker, b. i.
The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger. Rogers's Sermons.
3. A game at dice.
The duke playing at hazard at the groom-porter's, in much company, held in a great many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold. Swift.
To HAZARD. v. a. [hazard, French.] To expose to chance;
to put into danger.
They might, by persisting in the extremity of that opinion, hazard greatly their own estates, and so weaken that part which their places now give. Hooker, b. v.
It was not in his power to adventure upon his own fortune, or bearing a publick charge to hazard himself against a man of private condition. Hayward.
To HAZARD. v. n.
1. To try the chance.
I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
2. To adventure.
She from her fellow-provinces would go,
Rather than hazard to have you her foe. Waller.
HAZARDABLE. adj. [from hazard.] Venturefome; liable to chance.
An hazardable determination it is, unto fluctuating and indis-fruit on the same tree: the nuts grow in clusters, and are closely joined together at the bottom, each being covered with an outward husk or cup, which opens at the top, and when the fruit is ripe it falls out: the leaves are roundish and intire.

The species are hazelnut, cobnut, and filbert. The red and white filberts are mostly esteemed for their fruit. Miller.
Kate, like the hazel twig,
Is straight and slender; and as brown in hue
As hazelnuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakefpere.
Her chariot is an empty hazel nut. Shak. Rom. and Jul.
Why sit we not beneath the grateful shade,
Which hazels, intermix'd with elms, have made? Dryden.
There are some from the size of a hazel nut to that of a man's fist. Woodward on Fossils.
HAZEL. adj. [from the noun.] Light brown; of the colour of hazel.

trouble your head, but leave that to me. L'Estrange.
Work with all the ease and speed you can, without breaking your head, and being so very industrious in starting scruples. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
The lazy and inconsiderate took up their notions by chance, without much beating their heads about them. Locke.
If a man shews that he has no religion, why should we think that he beats his head and troubles himself to examine the grounds of this or that doctrine. Locke.
When in ordinary discourse we say a man has a fine head, we express ourselves metaphorically, and speak in relation to his understanding; and when we say of a woman she has a fine head, we speak only in relation to her commode. Addison.
We laid our heads together, to consider what grievances
the nation had suffered under king George. Addis. Freeholder.

teazed their husbands to buy them a laced head, or a fine petticoat. Swift.
23. Principal topics of discourse.
These heads are of a mixed order, and we propose only such as belong to the natural world. Burnet's Theo. of the Earth.
These heads are set down more fully in the arguments of each chapter. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Tis our great interest, and our chief duty, to satisfy ourselves on this head, upon which our whole conduct depends.
Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.
24. Source of a stream.
It is the glory of God to give; his very nature delighteth in it: his mercies in the current, through which they would pass, may be dried up, but at the head they never fail. Hooker.
The current by Gaza is but a small stream, rising between it and the Red sea, whose head from Gaza is little more than twenty English miles. Raleigh's History of the World.
Some did the song, and some the choir maintain,
Beneath a laurel shade, where mighty Po
Mounts up to woods above, and hides his head below. Dry.
25. Crisps; pitch.
The indispotion which has long hung upon me, is at last grown to such a head, that it must quickly make an end of me, or of itself. Addison's Spectator.
26. Power; influence; force; strength; dominion.
Within her breast though calm, her breast though pure,
Motherly cares and fears got head, and rais'd
Some troubled thoughts. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
God will not admit of the passionate man's apology, that he has so long given his unruly passions their head, that he cannot now govern nor controul them. South's Sermons.
27. Body; conflux.
People under command chuse to consult, and after to march in order; and rebels, contrariwise, run upon an head together in confusion. Bacon's Henry VII.
Let all this wicked crew gather
Their forces to one head. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
28. Power; armed force.
My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head. Shakefp.
At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought Beyond the mark of others. Shakefpere's Coriolanus.

As ever offer'd foul play in a state. Shakefp. Henry IV.
Far in the marches here we heard you were,
Making another head to fight again. Shakefp. Henry VI.
29. Liberty in running a horse.
He gave his able horse the head,
And bounding forward struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel-head. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.
30. It is very improperly applied to roots.
How turneps hide their swelling heads below,
And how the cloving coleworts upwards grow. Gay.
31. HEAD and SHOULDERS. By force; violently.
People that hit upon a thought that tickles them, will be still bringing it in by head and shoulders, over and over, in several companies. L'Estrange.
They can bring in every odd exception in grammar, every figure of speech, head and shoulders by main force, in spite of nature and their subject. Felton on the Classics.
To HEAD. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To lead; to influence; to direct; to govern.
Nor is what has been said of princes less true of all other governours, from him that heads an army to him that is master of a family, or of one single servant. South.
Abas, who seem'd our friend, is either fled,
Or what we fear, our enemies does head. Dryd. Aurengz.
This lord had headed his appointed bands,
In firm allegiance to his king's commands. Prior.
2. To behead; to kill by taking away the head.
If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten years together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.
3. To fit any thing with a head, or principal part.
Headed with flints and feathers bloody dy'd,
Such as the Indians in their quivers hide. Fairy Queen.

The Lord will take away the bonnets, and the headbands. If. iii. 20.

2. The band at each end of a book.
HE'ADBOURGH. n. f. [head and borough.] A constable; a subordinate constable.
Here lies John Dod, a servant of God, to whom he is gone,
Father or mother, sister or brother, he never knew none;
A headborough and a constable, a man of fame,
The first of his house, and last of his name. Camden.
This none are able to break through,
Until they're freed by head of borough. Hudibras, p. i.

HE'ADDRESS. n. f. [head and dress.]
1. The covering of a woman's head.
There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's head-dress: I have known it rise and fall. Addison's Spectator.
If ere with airy horns I planted heads,
Or discompos'd the head-dress of a prude. Pope.

2. Any thing resembling a head-dress, and prominent on the head.
Among birds the males very often appear in a most beautiful head-dress, whether it be a crest, a comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a kind of pinnacle on the very top of the head. Addison's Spectator.

HE'ADER. n. f. [from head.]
1. One that heads nails or pins, or the like.
2. The first brick in the angle.
If the header of one side of the wall is toothed as much as the stretcher on the outside, it would be a stronger toothing, and the joints of the headers of one side would be in the middle of the headers of the course they lie upon of the other side. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

HE'ADGARGLE. n. f. [head and gargle.] A disease, I suppose, in cattle.
For the headgargle give powder of fenugreek. Mortimer.

HE'ADINESS. n. f. [from heady.] Hurry; rashness; stubbornness; precipitation; obstinacy.
If any will rashly blame such his choice of old and unwonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardiness in condemning. Spenser.

HE'ADLAND. n. f. [head and land.]
1. Promontory; cape.
An heroic play ought to be an imitation of an heroic poem, and consequently love and valour ought to be the subject of it: both these Sir William Davenant began to shadow; but it was so as discoverers draw their maps, with headlands and promontories. Dryden.

2. Ground under hedges.
Now down with the grafts upon headlands about,
That groweth in shadow so rank and so stout. Tusser.

HE'ADLESS. adj. [from head.]
1. Without an head; beheaded.
His shining helmet he gan soon unlace,
And left his headless body bleeding at the place. Fairy Queen.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks. Shak. H. VI.
On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denham.
Prickly stubs, instead of trees, are found;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

2. Without a chief.
They rested not until they had made the empire stand headless about seventeen years. Raleigh's Essays.

3. Obstinate; inconsiderate; ignorant; wanting intellects: perhaps for headless.
If any will rashly blame such his choice of old unwonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardiness in condemning. Spenser.

HE'ADLONG. adj.
1. Rash; thoughtless.
2. Sudden; precipitate.
It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which, many examples having taught them, never slopt his race 'till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney, b. ii.

HE'ADLONG. adv. [head and long.]
1. With the head foremost. It is often doubtful whether this word be adjective or adverb.
I'll look no more,
Left my brain turn, and the deficient fight Topple down headlong. Shaksp. King Lear.
Who, while he steering view'd the stars, and bore
His course from Africk to the Latian shore, Fell headlong down. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
Headlong from thence the glowing fury springs,
And o'er the Theban palace spreads her wings. Pope.

2. Rashly; without thought; precipitately.
To give Ahab such warnings, as might infallibly have prevented his destruction, was effected by him evil; and to push him on headlong into it, because he was fond of it, was accounted good. South's Sermons.
Some ask for envy'd pow'r, which publick hate Pursues and hurries headlong to their fate;
